Southern Illinois Has Less Intense Feeling About War Than East, According To Mrs. Julia Neely

By STEVE KREISFALF

Mrs. Julia Neely, taking some time off from her work as a school principal in Herrin, Illinois, to visit her sister in St. Louis for the weekend, found that the feeling of war is much less intense in Southern Illinois than in the East.

Mrs. Neely, who has been a teacher in the Herrin schools for over 30 years, said that the students in her classes have been very quiet and attentive, except for the occasional mention of the war in the news. She said that the students seem to be more concerned with their studies and the future than with the war.

Mrs. Neely also said that the community is very much divided on the war issue. Some people support the war, while others are against it. She said that the war has caused a lot of tension and strain in the community, but that people are trying to cope with it as best they can.

Mrs. Neely said that she has been active in the community for many years and has seen a lot of changes over the years. She said that the war has been one of the most significant events in the history of the community and that it has caused a lot of disruption and change.

Mrs. Neely said that she hopes that the war will end soon and that the community will return to normal. She said that she believes that the war is a necessary evil and that it is important for the country to stand up for its principles.

The war has caused a lot of problems for the community, but Mrs. Neely said that she believes that the community will be able to overcome them. She said that the community is very strong and that it will be able to weather the storm.
