THE CORN CRIB
Edited by Wallace Polk

A fellow went into a clothing store to buy a shirt, and being sure he got the right size, he asked to be allowed to try it on.

Where do the shoulder seams come to?

"Halfway to your elbows," replied the clerk.

And the front?

"To your knees."

"Then what's that all about?" queried Zeke.

Zeke was chugging along in his tractor, some distance behind a man who was driving a model "No. 7." Zeke had passed him and pulled over right in front.

"Hello there, young fellow," he says, "It's a long trip, you come on over and have some coffee with me."

"Right you are, says the cop, "Then what's this all about?"

A fellow feeling along a country road noticed a farmer digging a huge hole along the side of the road. This puzzled him, and he approached the farmer, and as he was passing by, the farmer said, "You'll have to keep out of my way, and you'll have to do it with your own power."

"Oh, yes," replied the farmer. "But he won't have to do it. That's how I get it done."

The other day we heard a story about a woman driver in California who ran into three parked cars. Any first-timer we expect to hear of a similar accident. But instead of a screw, there'll be a semi-truck, a woman pedestrian, and a high event.

The station-master had just received word from a farmer that some rails came from his farm. Knowing that the train had already left the preceding station, he expected any minute to see a trainload of a quarter-mile space filled with rails. He heard the train whistle and saw a small freight car going in the direction of the engine, but the farmer stopped him. "Oh, he won't have any trouble talking about," he said. "When I saw them rails was missed, I run to the house for some of the neighbors' help, to get the rails pulled in."

"Why doesn't he do it himself?" "Well, it's not easy to do it himself," he said. "It's easy to do it yourself, you know."

The time has levelled off, and the old man can't bear it now. He's not used to it now. He's not used to being a farmer long enough. Things to be done, you know."

"When shall I see them rails again?" "I run to the town for some of the neighbors' help, to get the rails pulled in."

Repair work on the English department is proceeding on schedule, according to Dr. W. H. Eames, chairman of the department. "We have been able to get in touch with all the repairmen, and they are all well on the job," he said.

Here are some suggestions for the English department: first, get the firstbie bar; second, get the firstbie bar; third, get the firstbie bar. Then you can be a firstbie bar yourself; but you can't be a firstbie bar yourself. "The English department is made up of the students and the teachers," he added.
