THE EGYPTIAN

Out of the smoke and ambiguity covering our post-war world, has come a note of clarity and reality quite out of character with some of our President as he was observed at an interview with Mr. Douglas MacArthur, the Secretary of War.

The letter of the day is in evidence. Through his insistence on the "Good Neighbor" Policy was instructed the new formula of the State Department.

Only through this contributing influence was the Pan-American Union respected and adhered to.

Controversy to certain schools of thought, Mr. Roosevelt is undoubtedly for America to deliver its shaft of illusionism about the peace, for as Mr. Davis points out, "in the President, internationalism is accurately taken with nationalism, and his policies towards Europe and Asia have never deviated far from the traditional American path of preserving our country as a great power."

Thus Mr. Roosevelt has set out to engineer a delicate balance between two extremes, the straight and narrow path of nationalism and the sweeping, revolutionary way of internationalism. If he fails in internationalism, the hope of many, is too divergent with the philosophies of the great nations who believe this way will bring the promotion of their foreign boundaries. He also sees that select neighbors to national boundaries will eventually be the cause for continued existing hostilities and wars.

Mr. Roosevelt sees things as they now exist and will only expend money and labor to heal the alleged gashes of the past.
