The Neutrality Question

Apparently there is a great deal of sympathy throughout this nation with President Roosevelt's attitude toward war. The large majority of Americans do not want to see the United States tie itself in the affairs of Europe. In this attitude lies the hope that we may escape involvement in European affairs. But the question for the president to the proposal's president in Congress may prove futile in the long run, that sentiment is still present and hardening.

It is certainly true that the people in Europe are at war, and they are people who are in a public position to know. But are these same people not interested in their own future, their own country? What are they doing to save their own country? What is happening in Eastern Europe? What is the fate of the underdeveloped nations in the Middle East? What are they doing to save their own country?

As a matter of fact, the president has been very successful in the last few years in educating the American people about the dangers of the war. He has been able to make it clear to the American people that the war is not just a war between the United States and Germany, but a war between the United States and the whole world. He has been able to make it clear that the war is not just a war between Europe and America, but a war between the United States and the whole world.

WHAT'S BEHIND THE HEADLINES?

"Headline Readers"

By W. H. RICE

Five factors are at work in current headlines. A great conflict in the world is being played out in the Pacific, as the American and Japanese navies clash in the western Pacific. It is unfortunate that this conflict is taking place in an area that is not directly threatened by the United States.

The most immediate and direct threat to the United States is not from Japan, but from the other nations of the world that are allied with Japan. The nations of the world that are allied with Japan are not only a threat to the United States, but they are also a threat to each other. The nations of the world that are allied with Japan are not only a threat to the United States, but they are also a threat to each other.
