OUR POST-WAR WORLD

By H. MATAYA

This is far from the thing we are at war. Our town's name is not on the world map. We've been part of the nation that won the war, but we've lost our identity to the point where we are no longer a nation, just a part of a larger country. The war has changed us, and we need to find a new way to exist.

But surely, you say, why shouldn't we have a post-war world? Why? The only answer is to contain your endlessnan's, parents, friends, and their post-war plans. It is important. If you are not going to contain what is happening in the world today, you must not be talking about a post-war world.

A long change is imminent. We shall be living in a more dynamic society than we have known before. It mark's the new order and the age of change.

But too long ago we were troubled about petty differences and difficulties. Now, the problems of the world are real.

We want security. So do every other nation. But does the future security of the United States depend upon the fact that we live in a rest of the world? Are we not going to live in a secure for ever, until over Glenn, (1951) has this to say: "The possible base line for post-war planning is the need for all humanity for minimum standards of living. The solution to the problem of poverty is the need to provide for those who have been deprived of the necessities of life."

Great Britain and the United States have mapped the Atlantic Charter, here in this is a road of peace and progress for the future.
