German Student Editor Describes College Life

By Günter Friedrichs

Editor, Der Kursbucher, Frankfurt

A German student is completely

In Frankfurt universities about 5,000 students are working. They have a relatively short day with classes in the morning and evening. They all have few kinds of extracurricular activities due to their tight schedules. They are often found in the library or doing assignments.

The chairs are constantly occupied because of the heavy workload and frequent exams. They are not always in class which is common in many other countries. They must pass exams in order to continue their studies.

There is a fundamental difference between high school in the U.S.A. and Germany. In high school in the U.S.A., students must pass exams at the end of each term, whereas in Germany, they have exams at the end of each year.

Some students study for the first time in college, while others have attended other universities or vocational schools. Many students work part-time to support themselves.
