S. I. N. U. President Feels He Has Nothing to Apologize For; Hopes It Will Not Be Necessary to Limit Enrollment

President Roscoe Pulliam, refusing to give ground to State Finance Director Nudelman's Vindictive attack (see adjoining column), declared, "I feel I have nothing to apologize for in the statement I made.

Recounting the stand he took last week against arbitrary and unwise public interference, Pulliam stated, "It is my duty to the students of this college and to the people of Southern Illinois to defend this institution against what I consider an attack by the State Department of Finance.

"According to Pulliam, the college has been operating under a reduced budget and cannot continue to do so. He was basing his stand on the fact that the college was financially sound and could continue to operate without a reduction in enrollment.

Although the college desperately needed the $50,000 arbitrarily withheld by Nudelman, "the important thing is the principle involved."

In reply to Pulliam's letter to the State Normal School Board members, Pulliam issued the following statement:

"The college's news releases concerning the controversy over the thirty thousand dollar cut have not been rebutted. It seems to me that the facts are clear.

"I feel I have nothing to apologize for in the statement I made.

"I feel I have nothing to apologize for in the statement I made."

One Out of Every Ten College Students Is Earning Partial Support on N.A. Jobs

Dear Editor:

I am a student at the University of Chicago. I am planning to go on N.A. jobs this summer. It seems to me that the students should be given more information about the jobs. I think that the students should be given more information about the jobs. I think that the students should be given more information about the jobs. I think that the students should be given more information about the jobs.

Sincerely,

Among the complaints registered by students against housing conditions were those directed against inadequate lighting, which exists in many college rooms.

According to housing rules drawn up and passed to housekeepers by the college, each room containing two students must have at least one 60 watt bulb. This is the minimum requirement.

Students have frequently complained that only 60 watt bulb-in-use has been installed for rooms containing four students. In many cases, students purchase their own additional bulbs and place them in study lamps. In some cases, students have lighted the larger bulbs, raise food complaints about high light bill. When the student appeals for a 60 watt bulb, the Junior Housekeeper is often heard of effects on eyesight; the housekeeper immediately brings out the college housing rules which call for only one 60 watt bulb. The student is then left to lower the 60 watt bulb to the lighting of the housekeeper or give him more light. There are a number of complaints registered by students against this student's right to use his own discretion. There are others, however, who stand by their rights for their college administration.

We suggest as a possible problem for consideration by the college housing committee the right of the lighting in the college buildings. We admit here a few facts which we present to a consideration of the problem.

According to statistics, too many students are in dormitories, foot candles of light are needed for ordinary work. For reading usual kinds of work, at least ten to twenty foot candles are required. For comfort and other similar close work, from fifty to seventy-five foot candles are needed.

In view of these requirements, the housing committee be authorized to install 60 watt bulbs in dormitories at a distance of four feet.

Fred Cagle and Staff Develop Modern Unit of Nine Thousand Specimens

By CURTIS BATSON

In the past few months we have seen an increase in the number of students pursuing the study of art in college. This is particularly true in the field of art and design, where the number of students taking courses in this subject has increased significantly. The increase in the number of students interested in art is due in part to the growing appreciation of art in society. With the increased popularity of art, more students are choosing to pursue this field of study in college. The rise in interest in art has led to the development of new programs and courses in art, which are designed to meet the needs of students who are interested in this subject. The development of these new programs and courses has been made possible through the efforts of the faculties of the art departments in colleges and universities. These faculties have worked to create programs and courses that are designed to provide students with a strong foundation in art and to prepare them for careers in the field of art. The increase in the number of students pursuing the study of art in college is a positive development and one that is likely to continue in the future.

National Defense Tax: Hits All of Us—Some Like It, Some Don't

By ELIJAH CARMICHAEL

The national defense tax is quite a bit more than just a levy on individual income. It is, rather, a receipt for a product that is provided by the government to the nation as a whole. In the case of the national defense tax, the product is security.

The tax, which went into effect on April 15, 1940, is levied at the rate of 1% of the value of all property owned by individuals. The tax is intended to finance the cost of maintaining national security, including the defense of the United States against foreign attack.

The tax is paid annually, and the amount assessed depends on the value of the property owned by each individual. The rate of 1% is intended to be revenue-neutral, meaning that it is neither a pure tax nor a pure subsidy, but rather a means of transferring wealth from the holders of property to the government.

The national defense tax has been a controversial issue since its inception. Some opponents argue that it is an unnecessary burden on property owners, while others argue that it is a necessary measure to protect the nation's security.

The national defense tax is a complex issue, and its impact on the economy and on individuals is subject to ongoing debate. However, it is clear that the tax is an important part of the federal budget, and its success or failure will determine the nation's ability to maintain its security in the face of potential threats.
