BUREAUCRACY AND BERRY BOXES

Little Egypt, whose many berry growers are surprised to learn that such a dignified and high-sounding trade as the hallock or Leslie, has been undergoing class conflict. This is due to the fact that the Department of Agriculture has been engaged in a struggle to protect the interests of the berry growers of Little Egypt.

The Department of Agriculture was opposed to the use of the berry trade as a basis of its research work. The Department of Agriculture believed that the berry trade was not a suitable basis for research work because it was not a standard field of study.

An Illinois congressman, from Little Egypt, incidentally, heard about the Department of Agriculture's contention that the berry trade was not a suitable basis for research work. He was so interested in the controversy that he visited the Department of Agriculture and presented a complaint to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Department of Agriculture was so impressed with the congressman's interest in the controversy that it agreed to review its position. The Department of Agriculture later reversed its position and announced that it would support the berry trade.

The berry trade is now widely accepted as a suitable basis for research work. This is due to the efforts of the Illinois congressman and the Department of Agriculture.
