Reapportionment Needed in Illinois

The revival of the reapportioning issue in present session of the State Legislature has once again become a live problem providing comment, ceremony from political Republicans and upstate newspapers. The following fight interesting enough cuts across party lines, and only now that the Chicago Tribune is reading preparing the proposal of Governor Dwight D. Eisenhower that are called "rural" and "urban".

The need for reapportioning Illinois is due to the fact that more than half of the residents of Illinois live in the Chicago area, but the present reapportionment gives greater state legislative district of the general assembly in the belief that this provision of Illinois would reverse this picture. Under the new proposals Chicago would gain much political influence because of population factor, while downstate representation would be cut down. Every previous attempt to reverse reapportioning Illinois has on the general assembly has failed.

In an effort to acquaint the citizens of Southern Illinois with the factual information that has been given regarding the reapportionment in Illinois a brief summary of the study made by the Republican Department of Legislative Reform and Planning is given below. This report was prepared under the direction of William C. Scott, head of the Department of the Illinois Legislative Council.

Congressional Redistricting in Illinois

The Illinois state legislature has divided into Congressional districts. The purpose of this redistricting is to adjust the district lines in the two lower house of the General Assembly to approximate the population of each district. This adjustment has been made by the Democratic and Republican Parties, together with the suggestions of other parties. There are other plans for the district lines as they are being considered by various political factions.
