Display Of Eskimo Carvings To Be At SIU Three Weeks

Eskimo art, which is currently bringing premium prices in art centers, will be featured by the SIU Museum in an exhibit to be displayed Nov. 10-20, according to Harry Segedy, curator, exhibits.

A collection of 64 Eskimo carvings has been assembled by Eskimo Art, Inc., a non-profit organization of Ama Arbar, Mich. It is being circulated by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Carpenter Service, with the sponsorship of the Canadian Embassy.

The carvings, in stone, bone and ivory, are the work of Eskimos living on Baffin Island and along the shores of Hudson Bay and in the Canadian Eastern Arctic.

Eskimo carvings were "discovered" about 1930 and have become prized by leading museums and private collectors as valuable and interesting works of primitive art.

Using only the simplest tools and in the glimmering light in their igloos, the Eskimos have carved representations of the people and animals familiar to them, together with visualizations of the mythological spirits that govern life in the Northland.

Ma Phi Epsilon Officers Installed

Ma Phi Epsilon, international music sorority, recently installed Michael Calhoun as president.

Other officers are Larita O'Brien, vice-president; Rosemary Thompson, Kathleen Wicker, secretaries; Janet Cox, treasurer; Margaret Bariles, alumni secretary; Marilyn Mertz, historian; Denece Jones; chorister; Gertrude Miller, chaplain; and Barbara Tiefobold, warden.

A total of 7,555 students are now living on campus in Carbondale and in surrounding communities, according to Mrs. Anita Kuo, coordinator of Off-Campus Housing.

An additional 2,500 students are commuting from their homes, she added. Providing adequate living accommodations for the 12,500 students on the Carbondale campus is one of the main problems resulting from Southern's phenomenal growth, Mrs. Kuo said.

The University has space for only 3,100 in its dormitories and there were 6,100 applicants for those spaces, Housing Office records show.

Mrs. Kuo said housing the massive over-flow of students who need places to live couldn't have been accomplished without the aid of citizens of Carbondale, Murphysboro and Carterville who rent rooms and apartments to students.

Council Approves Sidewalk Projects

Earl Glosser, 2009 Gray Drive, "unofficial spokesman" for about 20 homeowners in his neighborhood, asked the commissioners if there is anything they can do about having the street in front of his house paved. "The mud is getting a bit fierce," he said, adding that some residents have put up with the unsurfaced street for as long as two years.

As the city has no responsibility or authority for the street, as it is still outside the city limits, moral support was promised to Glosser and his street. As it study by the Plan Commissioner, there is anything they can do promised. to Glosser and his street. as it study by the Plan Commissioner...

Mayor Miller said it is hoped that similar problems can be avoided in the future under the Sub-division Control Ordinance, now under study by the Plan Commissioner. Facilities taken into the city will be verified as to legal specifications, under the new ordinance.

Sidewalks have been authorized for construction near four Carbondale schools. The City Council Tuesday night voted to have plans and specifications for the project drawn up. Public benefit funds will pay for the sidewalks. New sidewalks will be on the north side of Freeman Street, from Oakland Avenue to Winkler School; on the west side of Oakland Avenue, from Main Street to Walnut Street and from Main Street to 200 feet north of High Street, near Carbondale Community High School; on the north side of Sycamore Street, from Oakland Avenue to Allyn Street, near Springmore School; and on the north side of College Street, from Marion Street to Logan Street near Lincoln Junior High School.

The Carbondale Park Board was given permission by the Council to construct a 24-by-48 foot maintenance building at the city reservoir.

Speaking for the board was its president, Kenneth Miller, administrative assistant to the SIU president. Miller presented a proposal for a lease whereby land at the reservoir would be leased to the Park Board. Among probably uses of the land would be additional recreational equipment. The from Oakland Avenue to try the proposal for a week.

The Council received a petition requesting that Linden Street be opened from Bleyer Drive to Smith Street.

Khrushchev Says Convoy Held Threat Of War

BERLIN

Two days of crisis on the autobahn ended yesterday when Premier Khrushchev said it was a goodwill gesture because the incident held the threat of total war.

Khrushchev expressed this view, holding that American authorities had given into the Russians, a few hours after Soviet authorities in Germany lifted the embargo of a U.S. Army convoy on the autobahn joining West Germany and Berlin.

The convoy moved into Berlin with Western officials reporting the Russians dropped their demand that they be allowed to hold a count of the U.S. forces.

This was directly opposite to the picture Khrushchev painted in a Moscow meeting with a group of visiting U.S. senators.

"It is possible that you and I would be here today" if the argument had not ended, Khrushchev said.

He declared the dispute was solved only because the command of the U.S. convoy agreed to a "little published procedure" regarding Soviet traffic, which convoy.

Unless this had been done, the Soviet premier said, "we could not have yielded and would have had to move over our dead bodies."

More trouble may come on the 110-mile road leading through East Germany, Khrushchev warned. He said Western convoys will be held up in the future if the Western Allies fail to observe what he described as established procedures.

Democrats Claim Top Prizes At Polls, But GOP Sees Trend

WASHINGTON

Republicans found satisfaction in their showing but Democrats claimed the top prizes in off-year elections Tuesday that bore the marks of the civil rights struggle and the gathering battle for the White House.

President Kennedy, who took a personal hand in one key Senate race, warned that he was "very satisfied" with the outcome.

The Republican National Committee saw "a definite Republican trend" in much of the ballotsing.

"There is cause for solid Republican satisfaction," the committee's chairman, said.

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey said the elections were won with optimism statistics and Democratic margin which were clear signs of party strength.

Democrats withstand Republican challenges to win the elections for governor of Kentucky and mayor of Philadelphia. But the Democratic margins were whitewashed far below those of past years.

Democratic Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson overwhelmed a Republican opponent to win election as governor of Mississippi — but it was the first Genuine GOP challenge in that Deep South state since Reconstruction days.

Republicans also could point to their strongest state election showing in New Jersey in a dozen years, and GOP victories in dozens of Indiana mayoral clashes.

Bailey countered; while there were the expected number of off-year surroorows in local elections on local issues, the Democrats triumphed in the two races in which the Republicans publicized as expected harbingers of Republican resurgence in 1964 — the mayoralty race in Philadelphia and the governor's race in Kentucky.

Eisenhower Dropped Idea Of One Term

WASHINGTON

Dwight D. Eisenhower says he will declare in his 1953 inaugural address that he would serve only one term as president.

He abandoned the idea after being told such a statement at that point would be a political blunder.

The former president also reports, however, that this did not change his mind about re- tiring after four years, and that when he had been in the White House 11 months he would fly to his brother Milton.

"It ever for a second time I were to shave my dignity of yielding to persuasion, please call in a psychiatrist — even the sheriff. I feel there can be no showing made that my "deary" extends beyond a once-time performance."

Eisenhower relates these episodes in the first volume of his presidential memoirs, a page booked "Mandate for Change," published by Doubleday.

Selfish Interest And The Good World

Law and Politics in Inter-American Diplomacy by C. Neale Ronning, John Wiley & Sons, Inc. pp. 157. $5.95.

Americans interested in finding the single categorical, uncomplicated answer as to what is going to happen next in Latin America and in Inter-American relations should read these two books, carefully. When he has finished, he should study them at length, with readings in other references. Then they will know that each decision will be based on the basis of 1. National (domestic) political expediency, 2. Only accidently quite the basis of "universally recognized principles" of law, order, or ethics.

In this a cynical conclusion? Perhaps not. Prof. Ronning of Tulane University has prepared a neat little text on Inter-American Diplomacy which concludes: "The hemisphere which has talked so much about ordering its affairs according to general principles has made conduct now stands at a crucial juncture. It may be that today's social revolutions and the legacies of colonialism and imperialism will have to be possible to find mutually acceptable rules. It may be that today's "requirements" presage a new and grimmer phase in United States policy, which will abandon efforts to secure the rule of law in international relations. The foregoing analysis has asayed today's "natural rules" in the light of the requirements of a hemisphere which is functioning from the "world community" in which those rules emerged. If it has pointed out the general directions for serious and more detailed study of the substance of rules which it hopes to bring or preserve a measure of "order" in United States diplomacy in Inter-American relations, it has accomplished its purpose.

These closing sentences of the study bring little hope for anything other than a long period of improvisations and diplomatic "fire department" activity which is the last analysis has characterized the reality of Interam hemisphere relations from the beginning. The text succeeds, however, in tracing clearly for the idealistic and otherwise, to establish some sort of legal and workable basis for action in the relations between the nations of the hemisphere. Many sincere Anglo- American allies have been urged to bring order from chaos while at the same time protecting their national interests of the moment or the current concept thereof.

Professor Smith, currently teaching at Rhode Island University, has presented here his second work on Cuba. The other, The United States and Cuba: Diplomacy and Diplomacy, was awarded the Theta Sigma Phi prize as one of the "top twenty books of general interest" of 1961. This carefully selected and well-edited collection of documents on Cuba and the United States from the ill-fated commercial expedition of Oliver Pollock to Havana in 1733 to the nuclear confrontation of Krushchev and Kennedy a year ago concludes with the final paragraph of the President's television speech of October 22, 1962.

"Our goal is not the victory of might but the vindication of right a cause at the expense of freedom, but both recognize freedom, here in this hemisphere, and, we hope, around the world, God willing, that goal will be achieved."

A careful reading and study of the entire volume should show any intelligent reader how completely relations on both sides have been dominated by the principle of self-interest. Sometimes it is enlightened self-interest, but even then the practical pressures of the moment seem to dominate the scene. A reader whose experience includes an intimate acquaintance with Latin America sees many situations in which a much wiser policy could have been employed. However, he is always brought to the realization that without much clearer thinking and a far more complete acquiescence with the realities of the cultural, political and economic situation would definitely have ended the conduct of our State Department, Con- considered, a more intelligent and far-seeing method of arriving at the day-to-day decisions of situations later to be lived with, can scarcely be hoped for. Even given the existence of a body of informed citizens, which will always remain limited in dimensions, and of a body of able and intel- ligent civil servants in the State Department, too often the selfish interests or the political expediencies of the moment would, as in the past, determine the decisions. Only when it is too late for a long range and constructive policy and when we are face to face with the realities of a cold- blooded war with which we cannot any unanimity of opinion upon which to formulate action.

How, then, in such a set of circumstances can an orderly development of systematic "legal system" take place? Only a Utopian would expect it. But, whatever acquiescence with the material contained in these two volumes, and others like them, should help to bring understand- ing if not the peace of mind furnished by the simple ponestice which everyone seems to seek.

The Negro Protest, by James Baldwin, Beacon Press, 56 pp. $2.50.

"...every Negro child knows what his circumstances are though he can't articulate them... he was born into a republic which assures him in no way, a way, a way, a way, a way, a way... and has got great force... and he has got a certain place and he can never rise above it."

Those words by author James Baldwin presage the essence of the current Negro protest.

Baldwin is one of three Negro leaders interviewed in The "Negro Protest", published by Beacon Press of Boston. The book is brief—only 56 pages—it runs through the essentials of the Negro's feelings toward his basic human rights.

The other two interviewed are Malcolm X, the chief spokesman for the Black Muslim Party, and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a Negro leader who advocates nonviolent resistance.

The three talk with Dr. Kenneth Clark, an eminent social psychologist who is also a powerful force on the civil rights scene.

Baldwin, an artist, is eloquent and dramatic in his expression. He looks out into protest movement in its most persuasive projection. He boldly challenges the white man to look at the Negro problem and realize that the future of the black American and the white American are the same. He also questions his ability to cope with the situations of the Impotent Negro.

A man of many, many words, Malcolm X believes that the black man should divorce himself from white society. "Conventional, political and physical... " he philosophizes, seems to be a glorified re- alization of the black man's dreams of the prejudiced Southerner.

King, though subjected to civil rights questions, retains his air of calmness and firmness in his Christian nonviolent convictions. His say's of his Ghandi-inspired approach to protest, "I think that nonviolent resistance is the most powerful weapon avail- able to the Negro in his struggle for freedom and human dignity and at the same time disarming the opponent by shaming him."

In his summing up of the book he states that there are differences in the beliefs and personality of Baldwin, King and Malcolm X. Clark offers a complete picture in a few words.

One might see here an attempt to explain the various positions and beliefs of the Negro leaders and their readers, but below the surface is this explosive and thorough documentation on which no matter what his means of expression, is to longer will be able to ignore. Baldwin's oppression which weighs pre- ferably on his shoulders.

Unusual Fact About Novel Is Place On Best Seller List

Macabe is the word for this unusual first novel. Perhaps one of the most unusual things about it is the fact that it remains on the best seller lists after the author has given it for a feat for an unknown author: "unconformed at any point in this novel. It is difficult to explain its persistent popularity. The plot is gone. Some, the central figure far from attractive and not even very convincing, and the de- nouncement is as depressing as ir is surprising. Yet the book has endless fascination which makes it difficult to lay down.

The Collector is a discerning and depressing study of an abnormal personality caught up in a plot that is a remarkable feat of imagination. The author, who served in the Royal Air Force in World War II, is head of the English Department at a London college and is also a writer of poetry. He tells his story to the future, using the narrator first the dual personality of the title and then repeating it in the words of the victim. The difficult problem for any novelist, and it is a testimony to Mr. Updike's skill that he brings it off successfully.

His protagonist is Fred- errick Clegg, an obscure clerk working in a bank of butterflies. A less appealing character is hard to imagine. Clegg is thin, bald, colorless and sad. He falls in love with a young lady, a hostess for a series of otherwise obsessed with the dream of making her love him; he takes that girl to the only way open to him by kidnapping her and holding her prisoner. His habit of many des- cripes in restrained and unusual words his life together with this holds her in a secluded coun-ries house.

The second half of the stori is told by the victim, Miranda. Her description of the Clegg is tiringly dry and conjure not any deaths, but no in Clegg's un- possible to imagine. He is surveying the field for another victim to take place.

The first character is not very convinc- ing, and the two central figures even less so. The fact that his is described as "a man with no bad habits and intriguing the reader, is a tribute to the author's skill and the deft- ness with which he weaves his macabre tale.

Squirrel Hunters May Use Small Rifles; Caution Urged

Memo to Illinois squirrel hunters: Use of .22 caliber rifle will continue to be legal in Illinois, is legal, according to William T. Lodge, director of the Illinois Department of Conservation.

"I urge all hunters who prefer to take squirrels with a .22 caliber rifle use the utmost caution," Lodge says.

In addition to the usual warning to squirrel hunters to use .22 caliber rifles, Lodge urges that such individuals not fire a firearm while on the move.

Lodge further warns that there is a possibility of injury to other squirrels as well as to people walking in the vicinity of the shooting area.

In addition, hunters should be aware of the fact that the Illinois Department of Conservation is currently working on plans to establish a new hunting area in southern Illinois.

Law Requires Bicycle Lights

A new Illinois state law requires that bicycles be equipped with front and rear lights when operated between sunset and sunrise.

The regulation went into effect July 25. The front light can be any color, but the rear light must be red. The lights must be visible for 500 feet. Violators can be fined up to $50.

The Carbondale Police Department reported that lights on bicycles are necessary to meet the same requirements as on motorcycles.

The motorcycle involved in a fatal traffic accident east of Carbondale Saturday reportedly had no rear lights. Two SIU students, riding on the motorcycle, died of injuries suffered when an automobile struck the cycle from the rear.

For the second consecutive year, a SIU graduate has been selected for an American Chemical Society Award as one of the top men in his class.

The society has named Fred Basolo, who received his bachelor's degree in chemistry from SIU in 1940, to receive a 1945 ACS award in inorganic chemistry at its annual meeting next spring in Washington, D.C. Basolo, also a graduate of Southern, got a similar award last year.

J.W. Neckers, chairman of the chemistry department, said only about a dozen such awards are made each year.

"Both these men have gained international reputations working in inorganic complexes," he said.

Basolo, a Christopher high school graduate from Coebel, accepted an assistantship to the University of Illinois in 1940, graduating from Southern, and later received his Ph.D. degree there. After several years as a research chemist, he joined the faculty at Northwestern University, where he is now professor of chemistry. Basolo studied in 1934-35 at the Technical University of Denmark on a Guggenheim Fellowship, and later spent a year at the University of Rome. He is co-author of a book, "Mechanisms of Inorganic Reactions."

Busch, who received his bachelor's degree in chemistry from SIU in 1951, is from Cartersville, Ga. He became a research assistant at the University of Illinois, from which he received his Ph.D. degree in 1955. He is now head of the division of inorganic chemistry at Ohio State University.
