Kennedy calls for election reforms

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy told 2,000 students at SIU’s Student Center Friday that the public financing of Congressional races “is absolutely essential” and would be the single most important election reform measure facing legislators in the next session.

Kennedy, D-Mass., in Carbondale, stumping for 24th District Congressional candidate Paul Simon, told a youthful, cheering crowd that the current financing law regulating presidential races “is inadequate” and slammed powerful lobbying groups who pour money into election campaigns.

In the 12 years that he has been a Senator, Kennedy said, “one of the most sinister aspects I have seen since serving there is the power of special interests.

He said public financing of elections is the most important, significant reform we could have in Congress in bringing government accountability back to the voters instead of the people with the big campaign check.

Kennedy entered the auditorium about 45 minutes late amidst a cheering and wildly enthusiastic crowd of about 1,200 students. Another 800 flocked outside to listen to Kennedy on loudspeakets after being turned away because of the capacity crowd inside.

Kennedy spoke quickly, reading a prepared speech which lasted 10 minutes before fielding several questions from the audience.

After being introduced by Simon, Kennedy joked about having thought about coming to SIU after high school graduation.

“But I wanted to play football, so I went to Harvard,” he said in his famous Bostonian accent.

Kennedy listed five major issues confronting the nation in which he said the Democrats were for the consumer and the Republicans for big business.

The rollback of oil prices, the Consumer Protection Agency bill, expansion of social security benefits, tax reform and public campaign financing were all issues which separated Congress along partisan lines last year, Kennedy said.

“We’re confronting the insurance industry and organized medicine,” he said. Kennedy added that the American Medical Association (AMA) will spend more money in campaign contests this year than they ever have.

Kennedy said current veterans’ benefits were inadequate and said, “I think it is a tragedy the way this society has treated the whole generation.”

Before going to a press conference, Kennedy asked two questions of the audience regarding its attitudes toward capital punishment and draft resisters. When he told the audience to vote only once on each question with a show of hands, someone cried out, “But we’re from Chicago.”

“That does make a difference, in close elections,” Kennedy quipped.

“Of the twenty candidates who ran for the Senate in the last election,” Kennedy said, “not a single one mentioned campaign finance reform.”

Corn, soybean crops damaged by frost

By Dave Wiegrock
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Jackson County corn and soybean farmers have been dealt a damaging blow by recent frost.

Robert Frank of the Jackson County Extension agriculture division, said farmers suffered large percentage losses. “There was a 10 per cent potential yield loss in soybeans and 25 per cent potential loss in corn.”

He said the loss is due to a lack of maturity in corn and soybean plants. The plants had not reached a level of maturity that could sustain the frost, he said.

Elden Shaffner, University farm manager, said University crops did not suffer much damage.

Shaffner said University corn had reached maturity so damage is light. “If anything, it helped. Most of the corn was mature so the frost will help the drying out process. This means we will be able to harvest earlier if there isn’t a lot of rain. We added the University raises only a few acres of soybeans.

Frank said University crops probably did not get damaged because they used an earlier maturing corn.

Frank said he does not know if county farmers used a different variety of corn than the University but said in another 15 or 20 days the corn will have reached maturity.

Shaffner explained why his crops were not damaged.

“Haying got our corn planted on time. We started planting full season corn on May 10. We could have started earlier but the time wasnt right. On full season corn takes about 150 days to mature so it can be planted up to a certain day. On June 16 we switched to 35-day corn which matures a lot faster.

By the time this frost came, most of our corn had matured.

He said in the case of University farms the frost will help because it will dry it out faster. However, he added that with other farmers it might hurt.

Shaffner said if crops had been damaged it still would not have hurt too much because the corn could still be used for silage.

“Milk this is the corn is gathered with the stalk and ground up for livestock feed. Even without frost damage we’re getting 2,000 tons of silage in sites for livestock.

He said most of the farmers in 200 of our Illinois do not have the type of equipment or labor to silage so if the corn crops were damaged it might be a complete loss.

“If it wouldn’t be economically feasible for some farmers down to build sites for silage because they might use them only 1 out of 5 years,” he added.

He said farmers in central and northern Illinois have to be more careful about planting dates because they usually can’t start planting as early as the southern part of the state. “Frost will usually come earlier there. Then they could be in trouble because their crops haven’t matured yet,” he said.

Shaffner said the University farms will average between 60 and 200 bushels per acre this year.

“I tell farmers on the weather and the amount of fertilizer an acre receives. Many factors are involved in the amount of yield,” he explained. “Most area farmers usually shoot for about 100 bushels per acre. Some years it is more and others less.”

Frank said so much has been lost it is hard to tell how much corn yield can be expected from Jackson County farms. He also was not sure how much each farmer will be affected individually.

“I’ve been watching the prices and soybeans are going up. Corn is holding average now but previously it had been rising. “With all the damage in Illinois and Iowa all I can see is the price continuing to rise.”

Kennedy won't back Wallace ticket

By Dennis Montgomery
Associated Press Writer

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Thursday that he will not support Democratic presidential ticket in 1976 if Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace were on it.

Kennedy, in Illinois to campaign for local candidates, told 2,000 students at SIU, "I wouldn't back a Democratic ticket with Gov. Wallace."

Asked by a newsman to elaborate, Kennedy replied, "It doesn't need any elaboration. The reasons are obvious."

Kennedy relaxed and joked easily with the students. While taking a count of the audience, Wallace's name was mentioned as a possibility for Vietnam draft resisters, he admonished, "Don't vote once."

Earlier in Chicago, Kennedy said a return to mandatory wage and price controls may have to be considered if other efforts at controlling inflation fail.

The Massachusetts Democrat, who last week withdrew himself from any 1976 presidential consideration, advocated a strong jawboning effort by President Ford to persuade business and labor to voluntarily keep the lid on.

If that and other efforts to cure the nation's economic ills fail, however, mandatory controls may have to be considered with "some assurance that they would be equally and reasonably applied." Kennedy, on a tour through several

Kennedy noted the success of his late brother, John, in persuading steel companies to roll back prices in the 1960s and similar success he said the late Lyndon Johnson had with automobile companies. He said they were "able to bring business and labor together and point out the public interest."

He said he also is opposed to an income tax on handicapped Greeks that accompanied with tax reform measures.

The Pirmann's are staying at the Holiday with all accommodations, transportation and entertainment paid for by the University.

Railroad abandonment becomes political struggle

By Gary Delash
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A federal plan advocating abandonment of railroads in Illinois and Southern and Central Illinois has developed into a political struggle which may last years.

Wallace, a supporter of the plan, has been tied up with politics and lobbying and the four railroads affected are more concerned with gaining power than aiding the transportation problem.

The U.S. Department of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission and The Railroad Rights Agency are the four Wills referred to.

In a press conference this week, Gov. Dan Walker said that the federal railroad problems in Illinois are "inconsiderable" and that the federal government would not be a benefactor to the state or the area. We are doing everything we can," Walker said.

In a report given before the Illinois Legislative Committee in May, Walker said that federal railroads in Southern Illinois would be a definite aid for the area.

"One of the real problems, and the reason I get so involved in this, is a fairly high percent of our grain moves by rail. If we don't have a rail service we don't have a market for grain," Wills explained.

He said the problem is especially acute in Illinois because of the extensive network of railroads in the state.

"We talk about wanting a competitive economy but we have many shippers that can't ship out grain because of antitrust laws. There are efforts being made to get the railroads to meet their obligations," Wills said.

The reabandition plan would eliminate all services for businesses in small 10-mile service area.

"We talk about wanting a competitive economy but we have many shippers that can't ship out grain because of antitrust laws. There are efforts being made to get the railroads to meet their obligations," Wills said.

Wills said the government can't decide what it wants. "One government agency says it wants a competitive market and another agency wants to cut the small operator out," Wills said.

"If I was going to guess, I'd guess that this case will still be in the courts when I'm gone," Wills said.

"We must give more consideration to just how much of the nation's transportation system is needed for national defense. What we have to have are the railroads. They are an essential part of the transportation system," Wills said.

Wills said the central railroad, and other railroads involved will seek to change every part of the act. The court should go on indefinitely, he said.

"If I was going to guess, I'd guess that this case will still be in the courts when I'm gone," Wills said.

Graduate bets against former boss Ford

By Laura Coleman

Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

When former Vice President Spiro Agnew resigned, Richard Lorenz was working on a Virginia newspaper and was involved in a pool centered around then President Nixon's choice for vice-president.

Lorenz bet against the man who had once been his boss and later was to become President of the United States.

Lorenz, now copy editor of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union, is a 1973 graduate of the SIU School of Journalism. He participated in an internship program during which he worked for the Congressman Gerald Ford.

Lorenz was in Carbondale Friday during his vacation from his Florida job.

"I should have known," he lamented, explaining that on the eve of the announcement, he called Ford's press secretary Paul Milich who had told him Ford was "in a meeting." It is likely that the meeting was a decisive one leading to Ford's nomination.

Lorenz, who said he's "always been interested in politics," did not always agree with Ford's policies. He said he feels Ford should have waited until Nixon was indicted to pardon him.

"I still hold my own views, but in a lot of ways, we weren't far off," he said.

Lorenz termed Ford's foreign policy conservative and made projections on what the nation can expect from him.

"A lot of policies we see from Ford will be similar to Nixon's; he'll listen to Kissinger just like Nixon did," he said.

He said Ford basically has the same views of domestic issues that he did when he was a congressman representing the fifth district in the Grand Rapids, Mich. area.

"Now that he has the highest office in the land, he'll take a temperate view of things," he said. He said if Ford were still a congressman, he wouldn't have proposed amnesty for draft evaders, because of the conservative constituency of his district.

Lorenz' job consisted mainly of answering the flood of mail which came to Ford's office. He said Ford personally signed all the answers. His other duties included appearing at congressional hearings for Ford and writing speeches, one of which Ford delivered to a manufacturers convention.

Speculating on the likelihood of Ford running for the presidency in 1976, Lorenz said it will depend greatly on the condition of Mrs. Ford's health.

"He will weigh it heavily," he said. Lorenz said Ford apparently promised his wife when he was a congressman that he would run for only one or two more terms.

Lorenz said while he approved of Ford's choice of Nelson Rockefeller as vice president, he was surprised at the announcement.

"Rocky's a dynamic and liberal Republican," he explained. He said it was a good choice because Rockefeller provides a balance with Ford's conservatism.

Commenting on the general atmosphere in the administration of Gerald Ford, Lorenz said, "Things are more open. It's not the Navigation style of atmosphere as it was under Nixon."

Lorenz said he admired Ford for his "deep respect for Congress" and cited his straightforwardness.

"He has a habit of doing things in an honest way, reaction is a good choice because Rockefeller provides a balance with Ford's conservatism.

Student Center director announces dual price rates for room rentals

Clarence "Doc" Dougherty, Student Center director, announced a dual price program for rentling ballrooms and river rooms of the recognized organizations and off-campus groups.

His announcement at a Friday news conference came as a response to the concerns expressed by Dennis Sullivan, student body president, about a month ago.

"We need to address ourselves to prices and student concerns. As the cost of running the Student Center increases, we need to increase our income. At the same time we need to recognize the problem students have keeping up with school expenses," Dougherty said.

On the future, non-student organizations will be paying higher prices for events than student organizations. Both groups are now paying the same price to rent a room, he said.

Dougherty said differing rates will make administration more difficult. Before the program is finalized, the rates may be changed for university departments, not just students, he said.

It costs $150 to rent the four ballrooms for two sessions per day. The river rooms cost between $17 to $14 per session. A session lasts approximately one-half hour.

He said activity rooms are available free for any recognized student organization to hold meetings. If these are full, the moving can use one of the river rooms with no charge, he said.

Sullivan said, "This action shows responsiveness of the administration, at least from the Student Center."

Council will appoint group to advise fate of $8.1 million

The Carbondale City Council Monday will appoint 26 persons for the committee to advise distribution of $8.1 million in federal funds.

Mayor Neal Eckert has submitted to council a list of 55 names. The council will choose 26 from the list at its bi-monthly meeting 7 p.m. Monday in the University City Cafeteria. The mayor will then select a chairman and the steering committee will start hearings, City Manager Carl Fry said Saturday.

The federal government recently earmarked $8.1 million in urban renewal funds for the city. No other city in Illinois outside of Chicago has received this amount, Fry said earlier.

The steering committee, formerly the citizens' action committee, will advise the council on spending the funds.

Schools not helping blacks

By Rita Roberts
Student Writer

As black children in South Boston are being pummeled with rocks and foul language from white parents there are probably many who are asking why. Black parents are willing to risk real physical harm to their children by sending them into that kind of environment?

It is because black parents know that generally their children will not receive “equal education” unless their children attend schools with a majority of whites. Black parents know that tax dollars are going to be spent in the schools where there are a majority of white children. Black parents know that all black schools do not generally have facilities equivalent to that of white schools.

What does the separate but equal doctrine mean and what is it necessary to be separate? If these questions are answered honestly, then it is possible to understand the black and white parents in Boston.

The term separate but equal came about as a result of a Supreme Court ruling in 1896. In Plessy v. Ferguson the Court held that separate facilities for the races was not unconstitutional. This new ruling (Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka) did not come about as a sudden revelation from on high to the wise justices of our land, but came about as a result of persistent litigation done by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

For example, in 1860 the University of Oklahoma was required to admit a “qualified Negro” to its graduate school since the black school did not offer the requested field of study. Once the black man was admitted, he was assigned a special “colored seat,” a special library table and a special section in the cafeteria.

Texas quickly set up a law school building, during this same period, when blacks wanted to study law. They found, however, that the building was not enough to provide an education equivalent to that of whites. The white law school contained full-time professors, a library containing over 65,000 volumes, scholarship funds and other materials necessary for an accredited law school. The black law school would have no full-time faculty or adequate library. The teaching was to be done by four members of the white law school who would commute to the black school.

The same cases and others like them led to the decision in Brown v. Bd. of Education. The court held that separate educational facilities were inherently unequal.

The point is that this ruling has not brought about any real changes. The situation of many inner city schools and rural schools is similar to the Oklahoma and Texas situations of 20 years ago. Many black schools have inadequate libraries, teachers and curriculum to meet the equal provision under the law.

There are black children who are told to play hangman’s bluff during the entire time that English grammar is supposed to be taught. There are black children who must listen to and watch the antics of a neurotic teacher while they should be learning math. There are black children who are labelled from the first grade as slow learners and pass grade after grade without any concerted effort to change their learning capacity, but instead are given high school diplomas.

Yes, there are still plenty of special colored seats and special library tables for blacks only. These special facilities are generally not equivalent to white facilities.

Black parents recognize the unwillingness of many government officials and school boards to provide well-trained teachers, a broad curriculum and custodial care to an all black school. Black parents have watched the change in upkeep in city streets, stores, and apartment buildings and zoning laws when a neighborhood becomes all black. These parents know full well that this so called separate but equal doctrine that still exists to day is merely a euphemism for apartheid with all its emotional and illogical ramifications.

Area quilters stitch for fun, profit

By Jerie Jayne
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The organization recently incorporated and is trying to bring money into Southern Illinois from other areas in the country.

"The biggest thing that happened to us since we incorporated was a special show held in Chicago for the association. Now we sell quilts outside the area," she said.

The association has about 200 members made up of town groups and individuals. It tries to help the quilters market their quilts plus provide social and educational venues, Krause said.

Krause, SIU art instructor, said mostly older women from small communities belong to the association. Sometimes students go and visit quilting groups to see how quilts are made and learn how to quilt.

"We prefer to sell to shops, but we're already taking orders from individuals all over the country," she said. Krause, a SIU area services field representative, said she is trying to make contacts in different areas throughout the country.

The size, pattern and amount of quilting stitched on the quilt determine the cost of a quilt, but they usually range from $60 to $200, Krause said.

Ninety per cent of the money made from selling a quilt goes to the quilter and 10 per cent goes to the association. The university helps support the association, but the association is trying to become a self-funding industry, Krause said.

Quilting is more than just sewing blocks together, Krause said. There are pieces of cloth used in all. The blocks are placed together in any design as the top piece. A batting layer of cotton or polyester is used for the inside layer. The backing is a large piece of cloth, sometimes a sheet is used, she said. The three pieces are stretched tightly and stapled to a 72 by 90-inch wooden frame and placed upon chairs. Several women can work around the frame at one time, she said.

"The stitching is a very small running stitch that covers the whole area of the quilt through the layers. The threads are 3 or 4 inches apart or the quilt will fall apart in the wash. The stitches can form any design."

"It takes a single person 14 days to make a double bed quilt. A quilting group of eight women, working eight hours a day, can make use three days. This is the advantage of the group," she said.

In a recent show ranging from six to 23 members, most once a year in May as a special event, the Southern Illinois Quilt Show.

"This is like a quilting bee. We see what can be done and what we would like to do in the future. Outside of this, the groups rarely see each other," she added.

Engineers repair road

Shawnee National Forest Supervisor Charles Hendricks has decided to use existing Southern roads to build the proposed George Rogers Clark Scenic Highway, Cold Hill, forest engineer, said Friday.

By repairing and paving existing roads, forest engineers will avoid high environmental impact which would occur with new road construction, engineers said.

The highway, named after explorer George Rogers Clark, is designed to highlight area forest and farmland and the high bluffs along both rivers, Abraham said.

The forest engineers rejected proposed new roads from the beginning for economic and environmental reasons.

The highway, a 14-mile stretch between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, has been in the development stage for several years.

The decision to use existing roads came after several years of data and public opinion collection Ron Abraham, Shawnee National Forest information specialist, said.

Carbondale police were searching for two suspects Friday suspected in a confidence game stitch billed an elderly area man of $1,200 Wednesday.

Patrolman Don Robbins said John H. Venable, 85, 508 S. Ash, was talked into clearing out his bank account by a Mr. Harris, who claimed to be a representative of the Carbondale National Bank.

Harris told Venable a malfunction had been found in his banking account, Robbins said. Venable was told to take his money home, and he would receive a call later, Robbins said.

Another phone call from Harris told Venable to check the serial numbers of the $100 bills. Venable had taken from the bank.

Police records reveal Venable was told in another telephone conversation with Harris, a Mr.

Johnson would pick up the money at the bank.

About 1 p.m., an individual showed up at Venable's home. Robbins said, and picked up the money in an envelope signed by Venable.

Venable, 85, said a similar dodge was attempted on two other Carbondale residents Thursday and failed.

In connection with the case, police were looking for a black man and a white man reported to be traveling together Friday. Friday.

Murphy said this type of "flim-flam" game is a common confidence trick, and could be worked any number of ways. He said the game has been played on a number of people from college students to widows.

Murphy recommends that anyone contacted by an individual claiming to be a bank representative should call the president of that bank for verification or check it out with the local police department.

Scott files court suit over election reform

CHICAGO (AP)—Allytta Gen William Scott asked the courts Friday to declare a local campaign finance disclosure act invalid and to change the ballot procedures of the local board of elections.

The board last week interpreted the act in a way that allows political party officials to conceal from individuals the names of a particular candidate.

Gov. Daniel Walker earlier this month called the board's action a travesty of the intent of the law and Scott said at a news conference Friday that the board's regulations would get the reform act and enable unscrupulous candidates to conceal their sources of campaign financing.

"The people demanded clean elections and the reform bill came in response to that demand," said Scott. "It is one step forward in dealing with campaign abuses. The public has been the victim of corruption too often in the past and Illinois cannot afford to go backwards now."

Scott filed suit in Circuit Court in Sangamon County, asking the court to block the board from enforcing its interpretation of the law.

He also asked the court to declare unconstitutional tie-breaking procedures of the board.

In its action last week, the board used 3:2 in voting the controversial interpretation. Under board procedures in the case of a tie, the two Republican members and the two Democratic members draw lots to see who will be eliminated.

Under that process, the controversial interpretation was approved 3:1, with Republican board members in opposition.

At a board meeting on Thursday, Democrat Michael Lavalle, board chairman, defended his action and said he will welcome a lawsuit.

Women's coffee house opening Friday night

By Pam Black
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Women's Coffee House located on the Longbranch Foundation for the Fine Arts and Sciences building, E.J. Jackson, will open at 9 p.m. Friday.

The coffee house was created by the Free Women's Alliance, to bring together feminists in Carbondale, and Katherine C. Meredith, member of the alliance.

Women in Carbondale have the Feminist Action Coalition, a campus organization, and the Women's Center, but Free Women's Alliance feels another organization for feminists was needed, Meredith said.

"We are not competing with the other organizations. We are working together to create a relaxed and comfortable feminist atmosphere," she said.

"There are still those women in Carbondale that need it," she said. Meredith said she hopes the coffee house will continue to serve those ends and also promote awareness.

Friday evening's entertainment will be provided by two young artists, Kathy Prinkey and Laura Brown who will present an interpretive dance. Meredith said both women have performed at the college and are fairly well known, she said.

The coffee, tea and apple cider will be served, along with snacks.

For the purpose of the coffee house which is closed to men, it is important to have women attend with other women without being threatened or made uncomfortable, she said.

The coffee house will be feminist-oriented and will be amended solely through the efforts of women. Some of the future programs will include poetry reading, films, music, theater and general coffee sessions, she said.

No money under table, Salukis leave

By Ron Sutton
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Peter Richardson has run over hills like they were ant hills for years. But the road he faces now may prove much more overwhelming for the 18-year-old Carbondale native.

He has fallen while reaching for the money growing on trees beside the track—in other words, a little “under-table” offering.

“There is no way I’m going to pay a kid,” maintained Saluki cross country coach Lew Hartog Friday. “It’s not necessary. That is not college athletics.”

“He was on a full-ride scholarship. I wouldn’t give less to a kid who can run a four-minute mile.”

Richardson quit SIU and returned to Fredericton, New Brunswick, in far northeastern Canada. He may or may not return to school in Canada immediately, but, regardless, he will be drawing $2,000 a year from the government.

The Canadian government allows athletes that sum to further their education or training, whether they attend school or not, according to Hartog.

“I know he didn’t come here expecting any money,” said he. “He’s obviously worked in Canada . . . and it came up three or four days back when he came to me looking for money, saying he’d had a car break.

“I’m not stupid—recognizing right away what was involved, and I told Rich (assistant coach Smith) to tell him he could borrow what he needed. A couple of weeks later, Rich, he told him I didn’t want him coming here with that idea.”

Richardson came to SIU anyway, but the open-hand attitude remained, bolstering both Hartog and observing teammates. Finally, after 10 days ago, the freshman came acting, and Hartog told him to leave the team until his attitude changed.

“I know, for a fact, that there were two schools trying to recruit him that were offering some extras,” said the Saluki coach. “I imagine we’ve been accused of it, but I can assure you there’s never been a case here.

“There are many places who will add a little pay or a automobile—little ones. Most of those places really don’t have very good track programs, and I doubt if any of the really top track teams have.”

Richardson is the first cross country recruit to leave SIU in such a clamor since Danny Shaughnessy in 1963.

Perry unhappy with pay, Robby

By Craig Ammerman
AP Sports Writer

To get Frank Robinson’s bat, the Cleveland Indians agreed to pay the aging superstar an estimated $160,000 next year.

Gaylord Perry, a veteran like Robinson, makes a reported $65,000 a year. He says he won’t play for the Indians next year unless he makes more money.

The 35-year-old Perry made that announcement after Manager Ken Aspromonte’s exit was announced. He also said he didn’t figure he would be with Cleveland next year, depending upon who is manager.

Beg your pardon

The Daily Egyptian article about the benefit volleyball tournament this weekend should have said the beer is being sold to Special Events Committee. It is not being sold to the park district, and the DE regrets any implication that the transaction is illegal.

Out of Shapin

By Bruce Shapin
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

So far it has been a typical fall in Southern Illinois. The doubles at McGuire’s are ready for picking, Giant City is a crowded retreat for many SIU students, and the Saluki football team hasn’t won a game.

The Salukis should begin spooling their losing image when they travel to Dayton Saturday night. In fact, this may come as a shock to my followers of SIU football, but Doug Weaver points out there still will have a fair chance of having their first winning season since 1971 when SIU finished the year 6-4.

After losing the first three games of the season, the familiar sound around campus brands the 1974 Salukis as “the same old SIU football team.” This is a harsh statement, considering most of those hometown critics haven’t had a chance to check out the ability of the Salukis first hand.

Now this may seem like a “rah, rah,” column, but it isn’t. The Salukis have made several unexcusable mistakes during their first three outings, but on the other hand, they have shown great potential.

By eliminating a few mental errors the Salukis could easily have won two of their first three games. Last week against East Carolina the Salukis were up 28-7 and fumbled a punt, missed an extra point and snatched the ball into the end zone.

“Four things that make many mistakes,” explained Weaver, “but when they do, they really hurt us.”

When the Salukis take the field Saturday against the Flyers, they will be meeting their first opponent of the year that has lost a game.

New Mexico State is presently 4-4, leading six of eight statistical categories in the Missouri Valley Conference; Indiana State is 3-4, rated sixth in this week’s small college football poll; and East Carolina, 3-4, has won of its last 13 games.
