Two Faculty Members Elected \nIn State Science Group

Two faculty members have been elected to the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), which represents approximately 250,000 scientists and engineers worldwide. Dr. Fred Miller, a professor of chemistry at the University of Illinois, and Dr. Virginia Smith, a professor of biology at the University of Illinois, were elected as members of the AAAS Board of Directors. The AAAS is the world's largest multidisciplinary scientific society and is dedicated to promoting the scientific enterprise and fostering scientific understanding. The two faculty members were elected from a pool of nearly 3,000 nominees, and their election reflects the recognition of their contributions to the scientific community. Dr. Miller's research focuses on the development of new materials for energy storage and conversion, while Dr. Smith's work centers on the study of cellular signaling pathways in cancer. Their election to the AAAS Board of Directors will allow them to contribute to the governance of the organization and help shape its future directions.
Zamir Bavel Graduates With Three Degrees

By Sue Alice Martin

Concentration in English literature will be among the specializations of the English literature graduation exercises for the College of Arts in June. Bavel, a student of the English department, is the first to have a Doctorate of English literature. He has also completed the Master of English literature degree and the Bachelor of English literature degree. The English department is proud of Bavel’s achievements and the fact that he is the first to have achieved such recognition in the field of English literature.

In spite of the three degrees, membership in the University Honors Society is still a matter of pride for Bavel. He has received Phi Beta Kappa, the highest honor given by the University Honors Society. In recognition of his achievements, he has been selected as the University Honors Society’s student of the year.
