The Editors’ Opinions

Precedure Paradox

During the past few weeks, students have been playing an unconscious game called “Guesstimation.” As a reaction to the pre-arranged “Do you think the library is open?” it’s almost like saying “Isn’t there an unspoken rule that the library is open?”

Originally scheduled to vote in the library, off-campus, and on-line, students, and staff found that pre-arranged “Don’t you think the library is open?” was not nearly as fun. Many foreign students were left on their own as much as some native-born with the help of the librarians. It seems the only way to vote is to actually come to the reference desk and ask for a “vote.”

As a result, the librarians (and the students) are forced to make a decision. The result is that the library is indeed open, and students have been able to vote. However, the process has been complicated by the need for students to actually come to the reference desk and ask for a “vote.”

Other Colleges

Ohio State University will have to start Orientation Week in its new year. A university officials said that the increasing number of new students has made it impossible for them to get properly oriented and for which Orientation Week was originally intended.

The University of Massachusetts has left a prill, which would make every college similar to that which it started in its first year of 1530. It has been suggested that the first year of the history of the university was an important part of the university’s foundation. It is for this reason that Orientation Week was reinstated.

Sarah Lawrence College, which is in the process of expanding its facilities, has decided to have only a few restricted residents this year. The change was prompted by the university’s decision to limit the number of students who can be accommodated in the dormitories. The decision was prompted by the university’s decision to limit the number of students who can be accommodated in the dormitories.

The university of Victoria will require freshmen to have their own rooms and to obtain their own roommates. The change was prompted by the university’s decision to limit the number of students who can be accommodated in the dormitories.

Says

Gus saw this year’s tourist season as being one of the most successful in the history of the university. Gus says that the change was prompted by the university’s decision to limit the number of students who can be accommodated in the dormitories.

Gus, who is a resident of the University, has been living in the dorms this year. Gus said that the change was prompted by the university’s decision to limit the number of students who can be accommodated in the dormitories.

STORIES

A very kind of southern hospitality was experienced at the Brown's residence over the weekend. The decencies of the pursuit were perfectly well appreciated by all. The hospitality on this occasion was such that no one could have been more pleased. The Brown's were kind enough to give the guests an excellent dinner, and the manner in which it was served was quite delightful. The Brown's are a most hospitable family, and their kindness is always appreciated.
