Legislator enters race with Dixon

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) - State Sen. Vivian Demuzio, a Democratic state representative from Carlinville, Wednesday challenged Treasurer Alan J. Dixon for the Democratic nomination for secretary of state.

The announcement by Demuzio, a supporter of Gov. Daniel Walker, prompted speculation that a state of candidates aligned with the governor was taking form to challenge candidates endorsed by the regular Democratic organization for the March 16 primary election.

Ronald Stackler, head of the Department of Registration and Education, disclosed Wednesday that he was circulating nominating petitions for attorney general, and expressed confidence the former state senator has not yet decided whether to run and denied that he was part of a Walker ticket.

Sources said Stackler decided to collect signatures after meeting Monday morning with Walker and that Stackler's campaign headquarters would be the offices of the Illinois Democratic Fund (IDF), a campaign financing organization created by Walker to back candidates of his choice.

Another cabinet member, Roland Barr, director of the Department of General Services, already has announced his candidacy for comptroller. Former State Sen. Michael Durkin received the regular party endorsement for that office.

Spokesmen for the governor would not confirm that Walker is selecting candidates to run against those endorsed by Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and the regular Democratic organization.

Walker told reporters he will wait until sometime after the filing period ends Monday before deciding which, if any, candidates to support.

Demuzio, 34, told a news conference Wednesday that voters should observe him, who wants to be secretary of state—not one who settles for that office as a consolation prize.

He referred to Dixon, who had announced his candidacy for governor in October but stepped down and accepted the endorsement secretary of state to make way for Michael Howell, Daley's first choice for governor.

Demuzio estimated that Walker made "six or seven" appearances on his behalf during Dixon's 1974 campaign against incumbent Republican A.C. "June" Bartellis. Demuzio also said he is backed by a coalition of groups, including the IDF and some $3,500 in advertising money, against Dixon.

Demuzio is a former executive director of the Illinois Valley Economic Development Corporation, a central Illinois non-profit service corporation. He was a Democratic legislative assistant to the state attorney general who will face Senate President Cecil A. Partee in the primary race.

Walker has not disclosed his choice for lieutenant governor.

Police still investigating fraternity dance shooting

By Scott G. Bandle
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

SIU Security officials said Wednesday that the investigation of the early Sunday firebombing at Small Group Housing will continue.

Capt. Carl Kirk of Security said shots were heard before the firebombing at the Kappa Alpha Psi house, 102 Small Road. After several people were ejected for not being members of the fraternity. No injuries were reported, said Kirk.

Kirk said witnesses at the scene told police that two shots were fired from the outside through a second floor window of the fraternity house. Kirk said the two bullets have been recovered.

He said that a barricade of cars was reportedly set up by the Security Police at Small Group Housing, with unidentified men standing behind it.

When Security Police arrived at the scene, no further shots were fired. A car, 504 S. Wall St., had crashed into a lightpole. Three bullet holes were found in the vehicle.

Another car, driven by Richard Little, 22, was also found facing backward in a ditch off the road. Both drivers were uninjured. In statements to the police, Little said that while he was parked near the fraternity, shots were fired at him. He said he was heading to another car parked a half-mile away in the lake. Kirk said no bullet holes were found in his automobile.

A member of Kappa Alpha Psi, 20-year-old Randy Johnson, was arrested by Security Police Sunday morning, after he was reportedly identified as one of the men firing into the house.

Johnson was released Monday afternoon from Jackson County jail. Assistant State's Attorney Larry Rippie said that the county was going to investigate any other crimes that may have been involved in the incident and that they could be brought up on charges in Jackson County Circuit Court.

James Hair, 23, president of Kappa Alpha Psi, said that "as far as I know, this is the first time of the events is correct." He said that fraternity officials have "nothing to hide." Security's report of the events.

"We have to be solved, no matter what," said Kirk.

NAACP office firebombed in 1979

BOSTON (AP) — Black and white students fought in the corridors of South Boston High School on Wednesday, the first day after a federal judge placed the racially troubled school under his jurisdiction.

The school district's decision to firebomb the headquarters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People after antibusing leaders warned that the court decision might open the door to new trouble. Police saw a report that four white men drove up to the NAACP office shortly after midnight, and a firebomb was thrown through the front window.

Contempt action against Kissinger dropped

WASHINGTON (AP) — House contempt action against Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was dropped Wednesday in a subpoena against Kissinger for information.

Wheat crop for '75 hits record high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1975 wheat crop was a record of 2.13 billion bushels, up 19 percent from last year's harvest and was worth a record $7.4 billion to farmers, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

The value was based on an average price of $3.49 per bushel at the farm, compared with $4.09 in 1974 when the crop, a record at the time, was 1.72 billion.

The 1975 record wheat harvest had been forecast by USDA for some months. The new estimate, however, was the department's first since Oct. 10 and was about four million bushels better than the old forecast.

Economists predict record prosperity

CHICAGO (AP) — Three economists Wednesday predicted record levels of prosperity for the nation in 1976 but foresaw continued high unemployment.

They predicted that the government will spend $10 billion less than in 1975 to finance the budget surplus and that production will increase by 3.6 percent, up $652 billion to $668 billion, with about 5.6 percent being accounted for by business.

But they predicted continued high unemployment, dropping to 7 or 7.5 percent by the end of the year. Government figures released last week put current unemployment at 7.6 percent.

EPA says SST in New York 'undesirable'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency has tentatively decided that flying the noisy Concord superjet aircraft, the SST, into New York City is undesirable and that flying the plane into Washington is questionable.

The decision, if made final, could severely damage the hopes of the British and French manufacturers to get scheduled landing rights in those two cities for their 1,400-mile per hour plane.

French government officials told a House subcommittee Tuesday the decision is the result of information which shows the delta-winged jet is far more than just anticipated.

EPA previously recommended that the 16 Concordes now in production be exempt from current federal aircraft noise regulations. The agency said, however, that it is not likely to land at any particular airport should be made on a case by case basis.

Bring FBI officials to justice, says Kelley

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley said Wednesday those FBI policy makers responsible for the harassment of the late Martin Luther King Jr. should be charged.

Kelley told the Senate Intelligence Committee he believes responsibility should be borne by the officials who created the campaign against King and that agents who merely carried out their orders should not be punished.

Witnesses have said the FBI's efforts to discredit the civil rights leader were largely the result of a personal vendetta by the late director J. Edgar Hoover.

Kelley, however, said that not all of those responsible are dead. He did not make clear how to whom he was referring.

'Tony Pro' indicted on kickback scheme

DETROIT (AP) — New Jersey Teamster Stephan Andrea, protesting that he was named, was arrested Wednesday on a grand jury probing the disappearance of former Teamsters President James R. Hoffa.

Andrea, of Weehawken, N.J., was arrested in the so-called "Tony Pro" investigation. He and five other men Hoffa said he was going to meet when he disappeared, was indicted in New York City on charges of running a kickback racket.

The development came just last August in the federal investigation, "there are no indictments in the immediate, forseeable future," said the Hoeffa of the joint FBI investigation is definitely very viable.

Committee approves tax cut extension bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee approved on Wednesday a bill to continue this year's temporary tax cuts for another six months. Despite a presidential veto threat, the panel refused to tie the tax reduction to a federal spending.

The tax cut, which is slightly more generous to poorer and larger families than the bill voted last week by the House, was approved by the Finance Committee 14 to 4.

On an 13-5 vote earlier in the committee, the chairman rejected an offer by Sen. Carl J. Dodd, Neb., for an end-around for a reduction in federal spending.

If the bill passes, President Ford renewed his threat to veto any tax cut not tied to a federal-spending reduction. Shortly after that word reached Capitol Hill Senate Democrats voted unanimously to reject Ford's conditions.
Tots twist and turn through Tumble Town

Three classes of preschoolers are twisting and tumbling their way through gymnastics lessons at the Newman Center, 715 S. Washington Ave., these days. The program, entitled Tumble Town, is supervised by Alyce Vogel, wife of SIU gymnastics coach Herbert and a gymnast herself since age 5.

The classes begin with warm-up tumbling—a few cartwheels, some backbends and an assortment of improvised movements. The children then move on to the equipment. The trampoline seems to be the big favorite as all the budding gymnasts keep claiming that it's their turn next.

The balance beam appears to be the greatest challenge for the pre-schoolers. Some just try to straddle it and slide along others walk along it confidently—just as Vogel is there with a helping hand.

Vogel says she's not sure why parents are enrolling their children in the classes. Vogel's own reasons for teaching gymnastics include developing poise, confidence and muscle tone in the children.

She said that for some of the preschoolers the classes are their first contact with other children their age and are their first exposure to organized instruction.

Lance Reynolds gets a helping hand from teacher Alyce Vogel as he threads the delicate path of the balance beam. Scott's advantage is that his feet are still smaller than the width of the beam.

Attorney decision

By Ken Temkin
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

After suffering through seven long months of bureaucratic inaction, the SIUC Students' Attorney Program Fee—the board seems forced by circumstances—commit themselves to the program for spring semester.

Unfortunately, the board seemed just as committed for fall semester. Where is the program now?

It is in the hands of President Warren Brandt—as it has been for the past several months.

Why has it been there and why has Brandt procrastinated so long in getting the program before the board?

President Brandt is a very good poker player, so he has never really come out definitively on his opposition to the program, but he has dropped some clues. Basically, he has told the press that he does not want to be responsible for anything the students' attorney may do wrong.

And even though the students' attorney program proposal is strewn with remarks addressing itself to the need of students to have some form of responsibility—Brandt still feels he could get his feet dirty.

It is a board of trustees who are ultimately responsible for all actions of a student's attorney, and in the eyes of many can only be translated as shrewd delaying tactics.

The time for stalling is long past due. If either Board members or the public continue to allow themselves to be the most pressing issue at this morning's meeting, a sad continuation on administrative bungling will have been written.

The Board now has several choices: It can pass the attorney program as written, and provide for the students of Carbondale one of the most controversial issues.

It can pass the attorney program with the modifications to the board of directors as suggested by Brandt, and surely this would be one of the more sorrowful moments in the history of the student involved in some form of legislation.

Or it can delay the program for an eighth month, which, of course, is exactly what the Board is doing to President Brandt.

In the minds of most students it's a simple choice. A program conceived by students, a program endorsed by students, a program lobbied by students, a program paid for by students can only be run by students.

The Board can see it no other way.

Student Government unfair in fund allocations

By Joanne Hollister

Student Government has done it again. Yes, that marvelous body of student representation, the people that didn't bring you Ralph Nader or artist Judy Chicago acting just as unfair in allocating funds for conventions.

A bill was presented this week to the Senate from finance committee member Gloria Sloan for the allocation of $366 for the club to make a trip to Springford, Mo., to attend seminars and workshops. The $366 would take care of travel, lodging and entry fee expenses. In order to fulfill the requirements to receive this money, the club members attending the conference are required to make a presentation of technical and cultural events to the students at SIU.

All well and good. The money the senate has to play with; and I do mean play, since they don't know how to work with it should be used to finance student conventions, workshops, and the like—screwed up as it is.

Unfortunately, the board seemed just as interested in splitting the funding only on convention entry fees. Hopefully the senate will come to their senses and fund this request. It just might be enough to make Brandt feel guilty.

Until recently, the senate had a policy in which it did not allocate money to student groups for conventions. It broke this precedent in November when it generously agreed to give an overwhleming $30 to Sigma Delta Chi, the Society of Professional Journalists (SDX), to help finance a convention trip to Philadelphia.

Members of SDX were more than happy to receive the $30, though the original request was for $200. Beggars can't be choosers. But this is a great student Senate money should be spent on the students.

CIA, FBI guidelines must be defined

By Mike Brecklin Student Writer

During the course of the Senate Select Committee hearings on American espionage, FBI and CIA directors Castro and the first Premier of Zaire, then the Congo, the late Patrice Lumumba. The CIA also supported呈tor groups of African nations that ended in the murders of General Rafael Trujillo, dictator of the Dominican Republic; President Garey, being unable to lead blacks in attaining civil rights.

The CIA and FBI are pieces of the U.S. government and as such are responsible to government control. They are not autonomous bodies subjectively deciding the guilt or innocence of foreign governments or American citizens.

Certainly, the United States needs intelligence gathering services for effectiveness in foreign relations. The problem rests in the distinction between intelligence gathering services and wholesale murder squads.

A more need exists to clearly define the ambiguous guidelines under which the CIA and FBI should conduct their intelligence and security functions. Congress should appoint independent "watchdogs" to inspect the various departments follow the orders of the CIA and FBI directors. And so guard against presidential misuse of the CIA, the director should report not only to the president but to Congress.

American Indians divided on Bicentennial

EDITOR'S NOTE—Thousands of dollars are being made available to America's Indian tribes so that they may observe the Bicentennial. The question is how to celebrate the nation's 200th birthday: with joy or bitterness?

By Peggy Simpson

American Indians are divided over whether to ignore the Bicentennial, participate in national celebrations, or use the Bicentennial to help preserve Indian heritage.

Of those tribes choosing to participate, some are planning such obvious tourist-oriented as singing and dancing. Many others, however, are planning events they hope will endure beyond 1976.

"You can see that the people are on the verge of realizing their history, and their culture," says Wayne Chattin, a Blackfoot.

"If we can use the Bicentennial to get people to help us case it, all America is richer."

Chattin is urging tribes to observe the Bicentennial. He notes that state commissions have set aside more than $2 million for about 100 Indian projects.

Those boycotting the Bicentennial are cautious about their reasons.

Who would want to participate in the 200th year of the rip-off of our country? asks Grace Thorpe, a law student and legislative aide to a senator.

"If the government would say, 'okay, we'll honor all your old treaties on water and fishing rights and we'll give back your land that was stolen,' that would give the Indians something to celebrate," said Miss Thorpe, daughter of Jim Thorpe, the famous Indian athlete. She is from the Sac and Fox tribe of Oklahoma.

Chattin is helping tribes obtain private and public funds for such Bicentennial observances as a conference on Indian aging to determine why the average Indian lives to only 45 and a national Indian rodeo. He says the rodeo, bringing together the champions of 30 to 40 reservation rodeos, would be the main Indian festival for 1976.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs takes no official position whether the estimated half-million Indians under government supervision should participate in the Bicentennial.

Last year the BIA furnished $300,000 directly to the tribes to support their own varied festivals. This year, Clyde Nahwoosky, a Cherokee, is helping the BIA put together some nationally oriented Bicentennial projects for $300,000.

Mrs. Nahwoosky, who prefers that designation, now hopes the BIA can underwrite at least three programs: a traveling exhibition of some of the valuable Indian painting and sculpture now on display in Washington, a series of readings from Indian literature, and a series of videotapes of tribal activities.

"Some tribes might want to tape their economic development projects or their attitudes on development, " she said. "Others might want to tape data on Indian medicines. The Crow might want to film their annual celebration with more than 300 tepees and hundreds of horses and people of all ages."

Many Indians say, however, that dollars of the major tribes are too busy protecting their land, water and mineral rights in court cases to get worked up about the Bicentennial—except negatively.

Mr. Chusa, an Ojibway from Wisconsin, said urban Indians from his area haven't patronized Bicentennial activities such as the Freedom Train because it is a "corporate showcase and we don't have any corporate ties."

Surfari Jamison, a Seneca who directs economic development for the National Congress of American Indians, said the threat to Indians' water rights will grow with the new emphasis on excavating Western water.

"Water is needed to develop these coal resources and our water is being illegally siphoned off or polluted with industrial waste," Jamison said.

Around the country, there are more than 150 Indian lands still being monitored by the Indian Claims Commission, 25 years after the cutoff date for filing grievances.

Who likes house guests?

By Arthur Hoppe

Democrats Jimmy Carter and Fred Harris have set a new, harder campaign strategy: to become the states of constituents—thereby "getting to know the people" and, incidentally, saving a huge number of hours and dollars.

Mr. Carter, reports United Press, always "makes his ease," says Mr. Harris "puts everyone at ease by immediately removing his socks and shoes."

So I wasn't too surprised when the doorbell rang and there I was in the middle of my brandy and, blackfeet, I was saying to myself, "What's happening?"

"I'm here to get to know you people," he says.

"Do you make your own bed?" I ask him cheaply.

"That I don't need your old ideas and hostess by implying they are so slovenly they don't change the sheets after," says the new senator indigantly.

"Sorry," I say. "Well, come on in and put me at ease by immediately removing your shoes and socks and..."

What've you got?" he asks suspiciously, "a foot fetter?"

Who is this guy? He breathes when he talks so he couldn't be Mr. Humphrey. He has chewing gum on his hands, could it be Mr. Ford. He has three gray hairs so he couldn't be Mr. Reagan.

Over a 25-year-old bottle of Scotch I've been hearing for just such an important occasion as this, I can't draw him out on the issues.

What America needs," he says, "is a new vitality, a fresh spirit and a bold sense of purpose. That is why I am opposed to our present government. Big business, big labor, and in favor of achieving a permanent peace policy, while maintaining contact with the Communists as long as it's to our advantage, and we keep America strong.

Well, that's no help. I've sanctioned our need for curb inflation, cut unemployment and balance the budget."

"Not yet," I say. "Darn, who is this guy?"

So he's going to present me with an invitation to the White House. "Would you care to purchase," he asks, "a bottle of my lumbago-ointment guaranteed to cure the heartbreak of tertiai dandruff?"

Having heaved him out of the house, I decided the trouble with this new campaign technique of getting to know the people is that it works both ways. And it's all the more puzzling to have a presidential candidate from a.bun.
SIU's 'Old Campus' continues to serve school, community

By Steve Millier

Construction on the SIU-C Campus continues as it has for over a century. At new facilities and programs are expanded, it is easy to forget the years of continuing service "Old Campus" has given the school.

"Old Campus" is the seven-building section of the campus that has served the community for nearly 50 years. It is located on the original SIU campus, as a result of the school's first construction from 1914 to 1916. Wheeler Hall, Allyn Hall, Anthony Hall, Moot Hall, Auditorium, Davies Gymnasium and Parkison Lab are the only surviving buildings of the school's early campus.

The oldest campus building standing in Allyn Hall. Named after Gov. John P. Allyn, the building was dedicated Dec. 2, 1896. Allyn Hall cost $60,000 to build. It was originally called the Science Building because it housed the Chemistry, Biology and Physics Departments. It also contained a gymnasium and library, "Old Science," which is the library, as it was later called, was the fourth building the University had purchased.

The first "Old Main" building burned down in 1888 and a temporary structure was built on the site of Allyn Hall. "Old Main" was the third school building constructed and lasted till just a few years ago when it was torn down. Wheeler Hall was added to the campus in 1900, due largely to the efforts of Judge S.P. Wheeler, who served as chairman of the school board and contributed greatly to getting the appropriation. The building was constructed at a cost of $20,000 and served as the school library. Originally it held 10,000 volumes.

Allyn Hall was added in 1914. After Robert Allyn, the school's founder, father, and first president, it served as the "Model" or training school of the University. In this building, some of SIU's early teachers were trained. This wave of construction was completed during the term of the school's third president, Daniel Parkinson. Ten years later the still-expanding teachers college, as it was then known, added its first dormitory. The structure was called Anthony Hall. The word Anthony, a famous women's rights crusader. The women's dorm was filled immediately after its construction.

In 1918 the Shryock Auditorium was constructed. The building was dedicated April 11, 1918, when President William Howard Taft spoke in favor of the U.S. World War I effort. The building, which cost $35,000, became known as one of the finest assembly halls in Southern Illinois. It was named after the school's fifth president, Henry William Shryock, soon after his death in 1922.

The final phase of early construction occurred in 1925 and 1926. Davies Gymnasium was completed in 1926 at a cost of $70,000, and became the school's first gymnasium. Soon after, Parkison Lab was completed. Parkison Lab was named for the school's fourth president, Daniel Parkinson. The building housed the Physics and Chemistry Departments, the book store and museum. Parkinson was the most expensive of all the buildings, at $525,000, and filled out the final amount of land left from the original 200-acre transplant.

Since these seven buildings have undergone many changes structurally as well as the services they now contain. After Parkison Lab, it was another 20 years before any other major additions came.

Postmaster warns of Zip misuse

Each year at Christmas time the mailmen are faced with the onerous problem, said Carbondale Postmaster Hubert Goforth. Goforth said that much of the holiday mail is delayed because it is undecipherable or is addressed wrong. The biggest problem stems from the use of ZIP codes.

In many cases the ZIP code is reversed or left out, and that causes delays in postal service. Goforth requests that each letter mailed during the holiday season have on it a correct name, a town and state address, a ZIP code, and a return address.

Louisville minister crusades for conservative objectives

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - The Rev. Tom Riner has crusaded against many things he considers scourges upon the Louisville community.

He has loudly denounced all productions of the rock musicals "Hair" and "Jesus Christ Superstar."

After a tornado ripped through sections of Louisville in 1973, he marched with his "Jesus Club," warning passersby to mend their evil ways or expect another devastating storm.

Meeting busing for school

Opera workshop scheduled

An opera workshop featuring scenes from familiar operas will be presented at 3:30 p.m. Friday in the..... Economics Building Auditorium.

Members of the Marjorie Lawrence Opera Theater will perform duets from "Madame Butterfly," "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Il Trovatore," in addition to humorous scenes from "Don Pasquale" and "Merry Wives of Windsor."

School of Music faculty members Mary Elaine Waller and Harri Taiwan Marvin will direct the scenes.

Students design, install museum exhibits

A series of temporary museum exhibits, designed and installed by forty undergraduate students will be on view from 10 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. Dec. 17 in the north gallery of the University Museum and Art Galleries in the Faner Building.

The exhibit is a course requirement for Anthropology 400, "Museum Studies," and Art 447, "Introduction to Museology." The art students' exhibits are titled "Children's Art," "Carbondale Through the Eyes of Artists" and "Desegregation and he bristles."

What we're dealing with here are demonic spirits," the Rev. Mr. Riner said.

The church's outspoken Baptist minister is a strong antibusing opponent and the chairman of Christians United, a protest group of local clergymen and lay people. He is also a leader in Louisville's Christian school movement, a cause which has been adopted by many only since the start of busing this fall in Jefferson County.

The Danville, Ky., native says that busing is "unnatural, illegal and absurd." He has urged opponents of protest rallies to be more militant.

"Jesus was not a compromiser," he told his audience. "To be a Christian is not to be a paxist."

The pastor of the 25-member Christ is King Baptist church talked of his view as part of a Communist conspiracy to overthrow the U.S. government.

The Rev. Mr. Riner said he believes busing would have never come to Jefferson County if it weren't for "highly sophisticated psychological warfare on the part of an elite intelligentsia."

He would not be more specific about the term "white" other than to mention an anonymous "group of wealthy men."

And he added, "I think the people responsible for busing knew what it would do to the community."

The Rev. Mr. Riner said that much of the interest in his Christian school program was probably sparked by busing. About 22,000 of the 120,000 pupils in the merged Louisville-Jefferson County school system are being bused under the terms of a court-ordered desegregation plan.

A Christian school of the type the Rev. Mr. Riner seeks to establish was opened this fall at a local Baptist church and now enrolls about 150 children.

In addition to his antibusing and Christian school causes, the Rev. Mr. Riner spends much of his time working on projects initiated by his predecessor, now in his third term as president of the local Women's Christian Temperance Union.

The Rev. Mr. Riner met his wife at the Campus Crusade for Christ meeting at the University of Louisville. He said their first date took them to a homosexual bar, where the two "witnessed" to whoever would listen.

The Rev. Riner's church is independent and not a member of any organized Baptist church groups.

New WSUI-FM show uses magazine format

By Edgar Tafe

Student Writer

What do "60 Minutes," "Goodnight, America," and "Saturday Magazine" have in common? They have a magazine-type news format and they have all found success with television audiences.

"Saturday Magazine" is a half-hour program over WSUI-FM at noon Saturday. It features a round-up of the week's news and feature stories of interest to SIU students and Southern Illinois residents.

The show is the brainchild of Joel Seguin, WSUI program manager. "Saturday Magazine" debuted Oct. 1 and is run by students like Eric Woll, a senior narrator who is the show's producer and host.

The show's debut featured: the effects of the closing of the Brown Shoe Co. on the town of Murphysboro; an interview with SIU baseball coach "Ricky" Jones and a feature on Phi Proctor and Philip Bergman--two of the comedians who made up The Pimpin' Threes.

University News Service releases, the Missouri Public Radio Association, the Southern Ilianian, the Daily Egyptian and the radio department's own sources provide more than adequate news sources, Seguin said.

However, Seguin said, welcomes material from his listeners, but says WSUI will be able to sustain the show without outside input.

"We are open to suggestions from anyone for material," Seguin said. "We're looking for stories on the human conditions in our area."

Some of the shows presented included: a profile look at Ralph Nader who spoke on the SIU campus at the time, and an in-depth look at the philosophy and art of Prisbee throwing.

Benton residents were treated to a feature on their own Doug Collins, the former University of Illinois basketball star now playing with the Philadelphia 76ers. Other shows have been an anniversary story on the rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar," and an interpretation of the Federal Communications Commission's new "Fairness Doctrine" from Missouri Public Radio Association.

Ingredient labeling to become mandatory for liquor products

WASHINGTON (AP)—Americans are going to be told for the first time which chemicals are added to their beer, wine and liquor.

The Food and Drug Administration told Congress on Wednesday that ingredient labeling of all domestic and imported alcoholic beverages will be mandatory Jan. 1, 1977.

"While we recognize that the issue of ingredient labeling of alcoholic products is a very complex matter," FDA associate commissioner Samuel Jacobson told the Senate committee, "we do believe that it is in the best interest of the consumer and all those foods labeled as informatively as possible and we see it as favoring of having their ingredients declared on the label."

The testing division of the Career Planning and Placement Center has announced the following test registration closing dates:

Jan. 8 is the last day to register for the Graduate Management Admissions Test (GMAT) to be given on Jan. 31.

Jan. 10 is the last day to register for the Pharmacy College Admissions Test (PCAT) to be held on Feb. 14.

ECONOMY,” said Richard Sabo, manager of publicity and educational services. “We are very dependent on construction, and you know how that’s been going.”

The firm produces are weelders and transformers and is a corporation in which current or former employees and members of the Louis family hold a majority of the stock.

Every employee on the payroll before Oct. 31 got a part of the bonus, the amount depending on a variety of factors, Sabo said, but he declined to indicate how much.

It’s all part of an effort “to produce better products faster,” Sabo added. “They receive what they have earned during the year. All are merited, and they know their rating. One way or the other, the vast majority, they pretty well can figure out what they are going to get in individually.”

Sabo explained that the majority of the employees are on piece work. Their merit rating depends both on quantity and quality—not only how much they produce but also how few of the results are rejected. The rating also takes into consideration dependability—how well they handle the responsibility,” the ideas they contribute and their cooperation.

"We try to eliminate supervision as much as we can,” Sabo said. “It cuts costs.”

James P. Lincoln, a brother of the company’s founder, John C. Lincoln, originated the bonus program, Sabo said. Workers had asked for higher pay, and Lincoln had told them the firm just didn’t have the money for it. "So they simply said, ‘If we could make more money for you, would you pay it to us?’” and Lincoln said yes,” Sabo said. “It’s a one-time payment. They are sharing the profits, but it’s not a profit-sharing plan in the usual sense of the world, and there’s nothing guaranteed—it depends each year on how well the year goes.”

The chemicals prevent or promote foaming, kill bacteria, preserve flavor, prevent decomposition and, with the addition of caramel coloring, can make a then beer look thick and rich, he said.

Jacobson predicted that the labeling would add one cent to the price of six-packs of beer and about one cent to the price of a bottle of wine.

Bureau of Alcohol Director Rex D. Davis said Jacobson’s request had the backing of the brewing industry but was vigorously opposed by liquor and wine makers.

The bureau had rejected Jacobson’s request previously because of the added costs of mandatory ingredient labeling.

The test is a very able test, Jacobson said, for the Admissions Test (GMAT) to be given on Feb. 14.

The exams are in the mid 1960s, several brewers in the U.S. and abroad began adding cobalt to the beers to maintain a rich fruity" head,” he told the House Government Operations Committee consumer subcommittee.

"Unfortunately, nothad never been tested in the presence of alcohol - a combination that proved to be deadly to all 36 beer drinkers,” Jacobson said.

Kinks’ ‘Schoolboys’ proves band can still deliver goods

Schoolboys in Disgrace
The Kinks
RCA LP-5096

By Keith Toshner
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Kinks haven’t done anything worthwhile since “Lola.” Besides, their only real good work in the early hits. There’s nothing on the more recent albums worth bothering with. Let’s face it, the Kinks are washed up as a band.

The above myths, in which many people still believe, are totally dissipated just by listening to the Kinks’ seventh album, “Schoolboys in Disgrace.” Not only is it the best Kinks album ever, but it’s also one of the finest discs of the year.

“Schoolboys” is a history album. It relates the crucial episodes of Mr. Flash, the villain of the two “Preservation” albums, while he is in grammar school. Flash is skeptical about what education can do for him in the first place, but when he falls in love with a naughty schoolgirl, he falls to pieces. He is disgraced by his headmaster, he and his gang are thrown out of school, and he’s turned into the streets, having decided there’s nothing more looking for.

One of the best things about the band is that they can take an old forgotten tune and give it a life and originality. The “First Time We Fell in Love” syntheses several of the best elements of the love ballads from the sixties into a pleasing up-tempo piece, and “Jack and Idiot Dance” takes a wornout riff, adds a few catchy phrases and comes up shining. In fact, “I’m in Disgrace” and “The Hard Way” are based on nearly the same chord progression, but written. Davies has the skill to make both sound original.

Another good thing about “Schoolboys” is that the Kinks explore different sounds from what they commonly offer. “Headmaster” is a very dramatic and somber piece, and “No More Looking Back” has a very jaun-oriented sound to it. Both cuts succeed well, with the latter being one of the most involving cuts on the album.

The performance itself shines. Dave Davies’ voice is, as always, both humorous and convincing at once, and brother Ray’s guitar playing ranks with his best here. Sadly, John Gosling’s keyboard work isn’t too prominent here, but he, bassist John Dalton and drummer Mick Avory all do pleasing jobs.

So pull yourself away from that AM dial, turn on the hi-fi, and give “Schoolboys in Disgrace” a few spins. Their best album, new on sale, shows why the Kinks have lasted this long together.

The Hissing of Summer Lawns
Joni Mitchell
Asylum 7C-1061

Like the above Kinks album, this is one of the finest albums in the past 12 months, and in many ways Joni’s best album.

There’s almost a total absence of happiness songs on this record, and near tragicio, so those who are easily depressed are advised to stay away. The songs stem from Joni’s profound hypothesis that many women are in much better situations than they realize, but they still aren’t satisfied. The theme is emphasized in two very moving songs, “Shades of Scarlet Conquering” and “Harry’s Home.”

The album’s mood is melancholy, as was that of “Blue.” Therefore, it does not lend itself to lengthy criticism, for it has to be heard to be believed. The sorrow ranges from that kind that we feel deep in our hearts and can carry with us in frustration forever if we like.

Joni succeeds with experimental (for her) sounds on two songs, “Shadows and Light” and “The Jungle Line.” The former is just her with synthesizer accompaniment, and holds the album’s finest vocal performance. The latter is downright eerie, being sung over the warrior drums of African Burundi tribe. The drums make the piece nearly explode in frenzy, but Joni’s subdued singing and the odd-sounding synthesizer keep it in check.

The song writing is as good as ever, if not better, and the instru-ments are consistently fine. And the mood “The Hissing of Summer Lawns” sets is nearly incomparable, as that seems to be one of Joni’s best albums, so the album must be heard, for this review just can’t do it justice.
The examination schedule attempts to avoid examination conflicts by providing separate examination periods for Tuesday-Thursday lecture classes. Some questions might develop for which answers can be provided at this time.

1. Classes that meet longer than one hour on Tuesday and Thursday, such as four credit hour classes, should use the examination period established for the earlier or later hour. For example, a class meeting from 11:00 to 12:50 on Tuesday and Thursday would hold its examination at 12:50 p.m. For classes meeting on Monday or Friday, the schedule on the last day. Provision for examination at 7:50 a.m. Tuesday, December 16.

2. Classes should plan to hold their final examination in their regularly scheduled class rooms. The space scheduling section of the examination period schedule and Admissions and Registration. Examination times are relative to the location for examinations, for those classes that hold their examinations in their regular rooms. Regularly scheduled rooms become a space conflict. This will be done sufficiently in advance of the final examination days to provide sufficient notice for all.

The following points are also pertinent relative to the final examination schedule:

1. A student who finds he has more than three examinations on one day may petition, and a student who has two examinations scheduled at one time may petition his class to take a two-day examination during the make-up examination period on the last day. Provision for such a make-up examination period does not permit a student may decide to miss his scheduled examination time and expect to make it up during this make-up period. This period is not used for a student who has been approved by his dean.

2. A student who must miss a final examination may not take an examination before the time scheduled for the class examination. Information relative to the proper grade to be given a student who misses a final examination and is not involved in a situation covered in the preceding paragraph will be found in the misprint corrected record returned forward to the members of the instructional staff at the time they receive the final grade listing for the recording of grades.

3. Classes with special time for all sections

Forestry Club profits from selling Yule trees

By Bob Morley, Student Writer

The SIU Forestry Club, nearly a year of hard work and planning, celebrated a successful Christmas tree sale. The club's annual Christmas Tree Sale, held on December 6, netted a profit of over $10,000 and was again considered a success by club members.

The club sold nearly 600 trees, and sale director Joe Lenzini said, "We could have sold one hundred more, easily."

The trees sold were from a tree farm in Goreville. The other 100 were grown by the club, and these account for the fact that this year's profits were nearly double those of past years, said Lenzini.

The profits from the sale are used for such things as repair of the club's tools, social functions, and materials needed for growing the Christmas trees.

Lenzini said many of the people who buy trees from the club come back year after year. "The reasons for this, according to a club survey, are low price and high quality. A 6-foo'tree from the club costs $7 while the same tree might cost at least $10 elsewhere."

Club members also can receive an hour of course credit for participating in the sale. This requires members to prune and shape the trees in the spring, attend a one-hour class each week in the following fall, and at the end of the sale, write a paper evaluating the sale and suggesting improvements for the next year's sale.

This year's 36-foot Student Center Christmas tree was supplied by the club. The club also donates trees to some local groups and to President Warren Brandt. Even though the club netted $1,000, "the money doesn't last long. Half the profits are put back into development of next year's Christmas trees, and some used in cultivating them are sharpened at nearly $50 dollars each."

"And," said Lenzini, "the money we make isn't very much when you consider all the people working since spring for free." The club's profits seem even smaller still when compared with those of a larger club like one at the University of Michigan. Last year, the Michigan Forestry Club Christmas tree sale netted over $6,000. Lenzini reported.

Council endorses airport location

The Governor's Advisory Council for Economic Development in Southern Illinois recently voted to endorse the Columbia-Waterloo site for the proposed International Airport. Chaired by Carbondale Mayor Neil E. Eckert, the council also endorsed completion of the feasibility study by the Army Corps of Engineers of Saline River channelization.

The public coal-loading facility of the Bogueport Port Authority and application for funding completion of the coal loading facility were also approved.

Council members commended the Illinois Department of Business and Economic Development, and Sidney Hardey of the energy division for efforts in locating the Coalcon coal gasification plant in New Athens. Eckert will forward council recommendations to Gov. Dan Walker. Eckert will also represent the council at hearings conducted by the U.S. Secretary of Transportation.

Local school systems combination suggested

The State Board of Education will soon offer advice to local school systems on how to cope with declining enrollment. One suggestion is to involve local citizens in developing a plan for consolidating school buildings.

"More than 100 schools will actually close their doors," said State Superintendent Joseph M. Cronin. "Many of these will be in the older, more mature suburbs of Chicago which attract fewer young families."

A study report filed by Harold Brown, Marion County Regional Superintendent and chairman of a task force on declining enrollment, predicts that five counties will increase in population (not school enrollment), a reversal of the trend, during the late 1970's and early 1980's, especially 30 miles from Chicago in each direction.

The report also states that full savings cannot be achieved in the first three years of declining enrollment, or until a school building can actually be "retired" or recycled for another purpose.

Panchal school enrollments, the report continues, have also declined, except at the kindergarten level.

The State Board plans to distribute a manual on how to complete enrollments and develop an orderly plan. One suggestion calls for acquiring classrooms and facilities to be shared with or leased to other public agencies.

"Quality, not quantity will be the major goal of the next decade," according to Cronin. "We have already begun to cut down on the number of new teachers trained--6,500 less certificates were issued in 1974-75 than in 1973-74. Also, the state this last summer has reduced the number of county school officers--by 54--to certify teachers and supervise local school districts."

Summer applications ready for national park, social work

Applications for summer employment are available for students interested in careers in the human and social services area and for work with the National Park Con-

Each student chosen will receive a scholarship of $500 for the summer. A brochure and application form may be obtained by writing College Age Youth Services, 773 Franklin St., Room 147, Chicago, Ill. 60605. Deadline for applications is March 1.

Traditional songs being modernized

Christmas is a time of music. From church choirs to department stores to street corners, Christmas carols and songs fill the air. The music is in vogue during this Yuletide season that people take for granted. As far as Christmas music is concerned most people are listeners.

How many people know, for example, that “Silent Night” was written on Christmas Eve in 1818 by an Austrian parish priest, Joseph Mohr, when the church organ broke? Or that “The First Noel” is probably the oldest familiar carol dating back to the seventeenth century.

But most important than origins, the type and scope of Christmas music has widened and changed considerably, ranging from religious hymns to pop and folk songs. The current trend is toward modernization of the traditional Christmas songs, according to Melvin Siener, associate professor in the School of Music.

“The traditional tunes are getting more modernized, more jazzed up,” Siener said. “Not everyone wants to hear ‘White Christmas’ sung by Bing Crosby. They may prefer a more modern style.”

When modernized, the songs usually become more pop or folk in style. Siener said that the reason for the change in styles is because “Christmas music is still a commercial business. It has to sell.”

Another trend discussed by Siener was a little more radical. Christmas music is becoming more secular. Songs like “Rudolf the Red Nosed Reindeer” and “Santa’s Coming to Town” are more popular than religious hymns such as “Little Town Of Bethlehem”. Part of the reason for the popularity of the secular songs is that they are light and happy compared to the solemnness of the hymns. The commercialization of Christmas and the emphasis on religion could account for the shift.

The traditional hymns of Christmas are still very much in use. School choirs still sing the traditional hymns, but now they are mixed with folk or pop tunes.

There is a facet of Christmas music that should satisfy every taste. So if you don’t like a symphonic or choral rendition of “Silent Night,” maybe you would prefer the King Family singing “White Christmas.” And if that doesn’t suit you, there is always “Alvin and the Chipmunks Sing Christmas Favorites.”

FEMALE STUDENT TAKES TOWN’S TOP POLICE POST

WENONA, Ill. (AP) — A 5-foot 3-inch, 120-pound cop is about to become Wenona’s top cop, and Mayor Fritz Campbell says, “I feel very confident in her, if she doesn’t work out I’ll be very disappointed.”

The city council this week selected Lucy Loetens, 29, a student at Illinois Central College, to replace Wenona’s former police chief, who left in October.

She won’t get the title right away, but Campbell says, “She’ll be the top police officer for this tiny farming community.”

“T’ll have no objection to women in this kind of position,” said Camp- bell, 49, who has lived in Wenona all his life. “I can do the job I’m for them. They really don’t sit down and look at the job from the advantages or disadvantages of being a woman.”

Loetens said Miss Loetens. “I take the job for what it’s supposed to be.”

Loetens said she is majoring in correctional rehabilitation and police technology at the two-year college, and expects to graduate next spring.

She’s expected to begin work in Wenona soon, and will have a marked squad car, uniform and will be on patrol five nights a week.

She’ll get $10,000.

She’s expected to begin work in Wenona soon, and will have a marked squad car, uniform and will be on patrol five nights a week. She’ll get $10,000 a year, and is going to put this week to buy a gun.

The city also has a part-time policeman and three auxiliary police officers who are on call. Campbell said. But he said crime is not a big problem in this community of about 1,200.

“We have a little vandalism perhaps at times, or a little burglary once in while,” he said.

“The most serious I can remember was a burglary of a department store three or four years ago, but I don’t recall any shootings.”

Loetens is working toward a brown belt in karate, has played volleyball, basketball and softball at ICC, and says: “Physically I’m very strong.

“Guys are going to hassle me to see what they can do or can’t,” she said, “but I’m totally prepared for this.”

In addition to her police courses, Loetens has worked as a cadet on the college security force since spring 1974.

Campbell said he has heard no objections in the community to her appointment, and she may later get the title of police chief.

“Th council and I all agreed we’d give her 100 per cent backing.” said Campbell. “My own feeling is that as long as she does her job as it’s supposed to be done, she will have our full backing, we’ll see her orders are respected and obeyed.”

Tankers swim in synch

By Scott Bariside
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Remember the Esther Williams movies where scores of swimmers would form the Lone Star of Texas, dissolve into a flaming rocket and end the routine with a patriotic number?

Well, that spirit still exists, and it's a recognized sport. It's called synchronized swimming and there is an organized club devoted to it at SIU.

Supervisor of the club is women's swimming coach Joyce Craven. She was a synchronized swimmer at Appalachian State University, Boone, N.C., for four years. According to Craven, the club is sponsored by women's intramurals, and is open to all students.

There are 15 women on the club and Craven said they could use some male swimmers.

"We need men to do lifts in our numbers. It also makes a really nice draft when you have a man and a woman in it," Craven pointed out.

Last year SIU did not have a club in this sport. Craven said one of the reasons she was hired this year in intramurals was to start up the club again.

"We started at the end of September and we meet every Monday night from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Swimmers coming out for the club must have at least an intermediate level swimming ability," Craven said.

"It's a very highly skilled type of swimming. You need concentration and good body placement, plus the ability to execute routines," Craven said.

Craven said a few universities have teams, but most of the competition is with private clubs. She says that most of these clubs are located in the coastal states, especially California and Florida. The AAI runs a national meet in the sport every year.

One of the most experienced swimmers on the team is Pat Fischer, a senior in psychology and education. Fischer had a full scholarship in synchronized swimming at the University of Arizona.

Fischer was introduced to the sport in high school at Oak Park. She was a member of the school club.

According to Fischer, the Arianna scholarship was the only one offered for synchronized swimming in the country. Fischer said most sports fans think that competitive swimming is all there is to water sports. She says that she competed in the western states as part of 39-member Arizona synchronized team.

While Fischer has no qualms about calling synchronized swimming a sport, she says that it is an art too. Fischer said a swimmer can get away with quite a bit in a show, but not in competition.

As an example, Fischer said in a show, a swimmer can move around somewhat and still look good, however, in competition the judges do not permit "traveling."

"A synchronized swimmer has to have a lot of tone and good lung capacity. One girl in a routine spent about 35 seconds underwater before the came up," Fischer related.

The SIU club hopes to put on a "tumbling performance. Craven said.

Badminton team blasted in meet

By Lorin Lewis

After scoring only one point and finishing third in a triangular badminton meet held Saturday, Coach Debbie Hunter is not aglow with optimism for the current badminton season.

Fran Hamman Janet Ridouren won the B Flight consolation bracket for SIU's badminton team and Ball State with 12 points in the match played at Ball State in Muncie, Ind.

The ladies are made up of men and women, but only women participated in the Wednesday event.

Hunter's hopes lie in the possibility of rapid improvement of the young and inexperienced members on the squad, or with acquiring new players with more experience. Among the women, sophomore Lori Ostman and Denise Harriet are the most experienced.

The remaining girls on the squad are seniors Sue Walker, and freshmen Brenda Smith, Barb Levy, and Ridouren.

Hunter said the men on the squad probably have more experience, but only two matches have been scheduled in which the men can participate. She has not seen them play in competition and is not certain of their skills.

The men are entering some meets on their own. Hunter said, in order to gain more playing experience. The SIU badminton team will be out of action until Jan. 26, when it plays its only home meet of the year.

Schaake is IM overseer

By Gary Palay

When most people think of Larry Schaake, Coordinator of Recreation and Intramurals, they think of a man busy setting up basketball schedules or handball tournaments.

But, in truth, Schaake is just what his title states, a coordinator. Schaake oversees four basic programs: 1) the men's intramural athletic program, 2) the informal recreation program, 3) the sports-recreation club, and 4) the wheelchair athletics.

And, if that isn't enough, Schaake is the department's fiscal officer, responsible for budget requests and he administers funds for his various programs.

Schaake employs six graduate assistants and one full time person — assistant baseball coach Mark Newman — who works in the intramural office until the baseball season is ready to begin.

One of Newman's main jobs deal with the distribution of student funds, known to many people as the $8.00 SWRF charge on student fee statements.

Schaake's main assistant is Jim Malone, who is primarily responsible for informal recreation but assists in the overall program.

Schaake places the utmost importance on intramurals at any school, saying, "recreation and intramurals" are a very important part of the total educational experience of the student. He said that "all education cannot take place in the classroom" and that by participating, officiating and supervising, students can establish social contact and leadership.

Student participation is at an all-time high due to the fact that society is placing a greater emphasis on leisure sports. Schaake said. He supported his statement by noting that as the enrollment at SIU went down for a couple of years preceding this year, student participation in intramurals increased significantly.

How good is SIU's intramural program that participation is increasing at a significant rate? "Facility-wise, SIU is lacking and we are the worst in the state in terms of quantity," But Schaake added that for the facilities SIU has, the program is excellent.

Schaake said however, that "if I was satisfied it would be time to move on."

The Recreation Building currently under construction will necessitate a new program structure, according to Schaake, but that the program will expand because of the additional facilities. Schaake feels he will need a larger staff because his present, staff "is working at its limit.

The funding for the intramural program comes mainly from the SWRF charge on the students paying. Schaake's office receives approximately 75 percent of the SWRF fee. The balance is made up of state funds.

Schaake points out that he has never had a funding problem in the five years he has held his job.

He doesn't just sit in his office surveying his programs. Schaake belongs to three national recreational organizations and is the state representative to a fourth, the National Intramural Sports Council.

Schaake likes to sum up his program by saying, "It is a reflection of what they (students) want."

Just talking to Schaake, one gets the impression that he is in love with his job. "My job is rewarding because you're dealing with students."

He says he is offering a program in which student's are learning and said, in some aspects, "There is more education here (intramural program) than in the classroom."

Fooseball results

The team of Jim Baker and Kevin Carrino came away the winners in Saturday's football tournament.

The tournament, which took place at the SIU Student Center, featured 10 teams and some of the best talent in the area.

To win, Baker and Carrino had to beat by some aggressive opposition, including the teams of Stan Emerich, Bill Kruber and Roger Lundwell-Pete Jordan, who were the runners up, in second and third, respectively.

"It's all a matter of mood and the speed of the player," said Baker, "The other teams were capable of beating us. I'm happy we won," Baker said.

Salukis to shuffle lineup for Williams

By Dave Wiccacsek
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

It's one of the more unusual problems the Saluki basketball team will have this year.

It stands right now, Coach Paul Lambert has six men that are probable starters when SIU travels to Omaha, Neb., for the Creighton Classic Friday and Saturday.

The Salukis beat Virginia Commonwealth Tuesday night and one of the most unlikely persons that figured to star in the game was 6-foot-8 freshman reserve Al Williams.

Williams is an 18-year-old Memphis, Tenn., native who scored 25 points and grabbed 10 rebounds. Because of his recent performance, Lambert said the slim, 175-pound Williams has earned a starting position.

Lambert, however, following the team’s practice Wednesday night, declined to say who Williams would be replacing in the present starting five of juniors Mike Glenn and Corky Abrams, Turner and freshmen Gary Wilson and Richard Ford.

The coach said he is not shifting the lineup because anyone, but, poor- ly, but because Williams just ear- ned the position.

“He made a couple of defensive mistakes, but Al’s a very cool player. He plays well under pressure,” Lambert said. “I thought he played a good game at UCLA. He’s going to be a fine college player.”

Williams said Lambert needs to “im- prove physically but a little bit.”

Williams had nine points and three rebounds in 24 minutes at UCLA last Saturday.

He starred at Memphis’ Hamilton High School, and bulled himself into being a fine outside shooter, especially for his size. That’s exactly what Lambert plans to continue to do-shoot, and maybe take some of the pressure off Glenn.

“When they (SIU) recruited me, they told me they wanted me to shoot,” Williams said after taking a breather at the end of practice Wednesday. “Last night (Tuesday) was the first chance I really had to shoot the ball. Williams was never really sure he would get a chance to start."

“I figured I would get a chance to start,” he admitted. “I thought I was playing good enough to start anyway."

Canadian Club vs. Team Canada

Floor hockey finale set

By Rick Korch
Student Writer

Canadian Club will be seeking its third straight championship Thursday evening, when it faces upset-minded Team Canada in the intramural floor hockey championship game.

Friday night, which was one of sweat and spirit as the Canadian Club defeated a tough Dirty Five Inc., 4-1. Canadian Club’s powerful offensive was too much for the Dirty Five’s goal-tender to handle, although he did hold the Club to less than their average of more than 10 goals a game.

After jumping out to a 4-1 lead in the first period, Canadian Club coasted throughout the rest of the game, and took its time setting up shots.

Canadian Club’s defense repeatedly thwarted the Dirty Five as they tried to work their way to the goal. Therefore, the Club’s goalie didn’t have many shots to stop.

An exciting game followed as Team Canada beat the Original Aborigines 6-0 on Richard Rock’s goal with about one minute remaining in the game.

No goals were scored during the first two periods as both teams played very rough and continuously kept the opposing team from getting any shots away.

At the outset of the third period, both team’s tried harder, as it looked as if the first goal scored would win the game. Team Canada had the faster team, but its speed was offset by the Canadian Club’s stronger defensive play.

After Rock’s goal, the Aborigines tried in vain to get a goal across, but with so little time remaining, it was of no avail.

In the championship game, it looks as if Canadian Club will have an easy time if their defense can keep Team Canada from setting up their offense.

The championship game is scheduled to start at 4 p.m. Thursday in Pulliam Gymnasium.

School song fails to enthral student crowd

By Scott Burns

Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Tuesday night while entering the SIU Arena, basketball fans were handed a flyer with the words of the SIU school song, Go Southern Go, and some cheerleaders printed on the page.

It was hoped that when the song was played, Saluki fans would burst forth in song, thrilling old alumni and inspiring the team to new heights (like 6-foot-11). Fan reaction ranged from “Boy, I didn’t know we had a school song!” to “Are they kidding?” Needless to say when the Salukis charged onto the floor they were greeted by yells and raised fists, but no singing.

Students just aren’t ready for something as uncouth as school song. If they start singing a school song, pep rallies might be scheduled for Lawson Hall or the administration might bring back the sock hop.

Since nobody cares about the school song, why play it? Why not play a song which suits the mood of the occasion, such as “Happiest Team in the Whole U.S.A.” when we’re winning, or “Brother Can You Spare a Touchdown” when the team is losing.

Even more uncouth were the cheerleaders. Jumping around, yelling, forming pyramids, the cheerleaders were doing their jobs.

The only person following the cheerers, however, was the drummer in the band, who accompanied them with a few well-timed beats. In high school (remember those days?), a coterie of girlfriends who knew every cheer and never failed to come through with vocal support, were usually at the games.

That doesn’t mean there were no cheers from the fans. Some of the favorites were “Blank, blank you are a bum, rah, rah,” to “Let the boys play, you raish hit head.”

Now, what’s the answer to the cheerleading question? Perhaps we are in the wrong place. Maybe they should lead their cheers in front of the players’ bench. Not only are the players more involved, anybody else, it would be a great favor for the fans. Probably the athletic cheers should be shouted for substituting players. The team manager could even get in on an occasional rah.

One spectator who was filled with enthusiasm was President William W. Brandt. He was president of Virginia Commonwealth for five years and the Rams were his special friends.

Brandt said he was going to cheer for both teams, but he did hope SIU would come out on the winning end, which, of course, was the result.

Brandt said he didn’t play many sports and he considers himself “just a fan.” He said that he didn’t have any favorite sports—he just likes them all. Saturate to the SIU- UCLA game, I noticed the announcer made several comments about the raw deal the Salukis were getting from the officials. He made several comments like “Boy, that guy is all over Mike Glenn, and there still isn’t a whistle.”

The announcing booths were on the floor which is considered by many people as the worst seat in the house. Still the negative feedback kept coming, although some individuals on the scene said the officiating wasn’t bad enough to be in the stands.

This type of announcing seems to promote bad sportsmanship from the fans. The SIU announcer, of course, is supposed to be more knowledgeable about the game than the average fan, but that bad for everyone is when the team comes back home fans will probably flood his lead and gripe about every call.

Sunday school children will perform a recitation at 7:30 p.m. on Christmas Eve at Our Savior Lutheran Church, 30 W. Main. At 10 a.m. Christmas morning a festival service will be staged.
Two services of lessons and carols, with both the junior and senior choirs, has also been stated for the fourth Sunday of Advent at Our Savior Lutheran Church. The Dec. 23 services are at 8:15 a.m. and 10:45 a.m. and A few Carbondale churches held Christmas services Dec. 7, so SIU students could attend before the semester ended.
Season's symbol

Trying to fit Christmas shopping into an end-of-semester schedule of exams and a student budget can be a problem, as Becky Wieldt, junior in administration of justice, discovered on a recent afternoon. The outstretched hand reflected in a window somehow seemed symbolic. But she escaped the crassness with a bit of browsing in a Christmas classic, and even found spirit for a gift purchase. InterGreek Council festivities varied

By Diane Pintozzi

Student Writer

Greek-letter groups are having an old-fashioned Christmas this year. Parties, carding, Christmas dinners and family get-togethers will play a prominent role in fraternity and sorority festivities, according to Ralph Rosynk, chairman of SIU's InterGreek Council.

This is the week most pledges go active, said Rosynk. This week of the Christmas parties, the 300 pledges will be introduced formally by means of organized parties and formal dinners.

Most of the houses have a "Housewarming," the cleaning and decorating of the fraternity and sorority house for Christmas, and decorating the tree, and then the following evening, the party.

The party usually includes a gift exchange and Christmas gag giving. Names are pulled from a hat and a gift is bought for the person picked, usually symbolizing something ridiculous that person did during the year. Dance School formal dances for fraternity or sorority members by other members, is also featured, according to a Phi Sigma-Kappa member.

Traditionally, activities are planned for underprivileged children and needy families. Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and its Little Sisters held a Christmas Party Wednesday for area underprivileged children. Sigma Pi fraternity is selling tickets at the University Mall for its annual "Shopping Spree at Penny's." The money will go to the Heart Fund.

However, Operation Merry Christmas, an InterGreek program for underprivileged children, is not being planned this year because "the local police didn't have the manpower to assist with the program," according to Timmer Calandare, vice-chairman for InterGreek Council. Consequently, some of the fraternities and sororities who annually assisted with the program are assisting with the Student Government Activities Council's (SGAC) "A Touch of Christmas" party at the Student Center, Thursday.

Sorority and fraternity members will pose as Santa Clause and his Elves, and will help with the decorating. The windows are being painted by Greeks in competition with a maximum of three windows to a group.

Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority said it was planning to aid the Kidney Fund Drive but was not contacted this year, so members are helping SGAC with the party. Some other groups which were involved with "Operation" said they, too, would help SGAC.

Rosynk said many groups are reverting to chapter projects because of the cancellation of "Operation" this year. "Many groups are donating to care projects, such as needy baskets and carding at area nursing homes and daycare centers," said Rosynk.

The annual Greek Carol-A-Thon will also be held Thursday. The carolers will start at the Alpha Sigma Alpha house in Small Group Housing, and work their way down Greek Row, picking up carolers from house to house. The "progressive caroling" will then proceed off-campus, to President Brandt's house and end at Midland's Bar, according to one fraternity.

Rosynk said that the carolers would also visit the dorms, and the main streets in town.

Christmas plants can outlast the season

By Mary Beth Moscinski
Student Writer

Christmas plants can be lasting gifts as well as seasonal decorations to brighten the holidays.

With proper care, many plants can be kept year round, to bloom again the following year. The most popular Christmas plant, the poinsettia, can be cut in the spring and planted in shade.

The poinsettias displayed at Jerry's Flowers and Gifts shop in the Campus Shopping Center come with indoor care tags, which suggest a sunny window, away from drafts or hot air. The poinsettia has leaflike red, pink, or white flowers, and needs to be watered only when the soil is thoroughly dry.

The Christmas cactus will produce a red flower once a year, but can be kept all year to bloom again. Bob Applanalp, clerk at Jerry's Flower and Gift Shop, said, "Early in October, they need a rest period. Put them in a closet, or a dark place for about a month." Unlike other cacti, the Christmas Cactus needs normal watering until the buds form, and then a reduced amount until it fully flowers.

"Azaleas are quite popular, but not as plentiful as we'd like," said Norma Lager of Irene's Florist shop, 607 S. Illinois. Azaleas need a cool resting place, and should be watered while the soil is still moist. Like the poinsettia, they can be planted outside in the spring, and will bloom again.

Lager also said the Jerusalem Cherry is a popular plant gift at Christmas. "The problem is that they're poisonous, so you shouldn't keep them where little children are present," she said. The Jerusalem Cherry is a green bush with red cherries, which needs sunlight and little water to survive.

The Cyclamen needs additional care for best results, but this Christmas plant will bloom pink flowers if it gets bright Northern light in the winter, and diffused light the rest of the year. Ralph Bachman, author of "Caring for Indoor Flowers and Plants" says the plant needs cool temperatures at night, 50 to 60 degrees, and 60 to 70 degrees during the day. It should be watered from the side of the pot while the soil is still moist, because the leaves grow from the crown of the plant.

“What, no snow for these things?” says Ms. Emily Jones, Cairo.

Santa usually finds sledding tough in Southern Illinois

By Gary Palsey
Student Writer

’Twas the night before Christmas, and all through Southern Illinois, no snow was falling, thus no cause for joy.

These words can be recited year after year in the Southern Illinois area because the odds are we are not going to get snow on Christmas Eve.

Going back through 11 Christmas Eves to 1964, on only two occasions did snow fall on Christmas Eve. In 1969, just a trace of snow was recorded, and it did not stay for Christmas Day because the temperature never fell below 35 degrees.

Three years ago, light snow was again reported, but again temperatures dropped only as low as 36 leaving nothing white on the ground.

An 11-year average of Christmas Eves finds a mean temperature of 48 degrees, hardly the type of weather that Bing Crosby had in mind in “White Christmas.”

The highest temperatures reported the night before Christmas in the last ten years were an unseasonable 62 degrees in 1964 and 61 in 1965.

If the records mean anything, this Christmas Eve will be 48 degrees, the skies will be overcast, and the chance of precipitation will be 60 per cent.

The chief observer at the Southern Illinois Airport, Louis H. Ditzler, said “it seems that the weather pattern 35 years ago was for much more severe winter weather.” Ditzler went on to explain that the Southern Illinois area gets its worst weather after Jan. 1.

So, don’t expect the ground in Southern Illinois to be covered with white on Christmas Day. Just put “White Christmas” on the record player and hope.

Inter-faith group aids true spirit of season

The council is composed of 12 churches which work together in contacting various public agencies, nursing homes, schools for retarded children, halfway houses and other social service organizations in search of persons who qualify for help. The council is seeking to help those people who have no families, won't be remembered and have very low incomes.

"By aiding the family with low income in buying the children toys and clothing, we hope they might enjoy Christmas a little more," says Mrs. Sally Smith, coordinator for the project. Names of needy people are gathered by the individual organizations. In case there are too many needy people for the council to handle, it is left to these organizations to decide which persons are most in need.

Presently, 1,160 names have been turned in to the council. The names will be distributed to the individual churches. Members of the church congregations will draw names, which will be coded to protect the individuals from embarassment, and will buy gifts for them.

"The people buy for them as if they were members of their families. Some people buy for one and some buy for six. All the clothing and toys given are new," says Mrs. Smith. "We don't want anybody to feel it's charity. We're just trying to show concern and love for our brothers and sisters," says Mrs. Smith.

People of all ages, colors, sexes and sizes are helped.

The churches participating include St. Francis Xavier Catholic, St. Andrews Episcopal, First Baptist, Grace United Methodist, Church of the Good Shepherd, Epiphany Lutheran, Lakeland Baptist, Presbyterian, First Christian, Walnut Baptist, First United Methodist and University Baptist.

Inflation hasn't hurt sales, say retailers

According to Carbondale merchants, people are buying more and shopping earlier regardless of price increases. B.R. Sells, manager of Woolworth's, said, "The two main factors in price increases are oil and high labor costs, but the high prices don't effect our sales, especially toys, because kids come first at Christmas." K-mart Assistant Manager Travis Prater, said that K-mart is unaffected by high prices this year. "Wages are going up too, and everybody feels they have to buy Christmas gifts," he said.

Shoppers agree that prices are more competitive this year. Brent Smith, of Murphysboro, said that he's seen more specials and bargains this year. Jane Trott, of Vienna, thinks shopping in the Carbondale area helps her save money by catching sales before Christmas.

While shoppers are buying more, many of them are finding ways to make each dollar go farther. Many people, especially students, are turning to do-it-yourself gifts, for less expensive presents with a more personal touch. "People are buying things they can make themselves as gifts, like macrame," said Pat Lotz, co-owner of Classic Hobbies.

At Walden Bookstore, Patty Halligan, assistant manager, said that best-selling books are Christmas favorites. Noticing the early shoppers, she said, (Continued on page 14)

Santa's pack will be bulging despite costs, retailers say

"Money is tight, so people are spreading it out so that they don't have to pay out at once. But our sales are great."

Many of the old regulars are on Christmas shopping lists with prices varying from store to store.

The cost of the old standby game, Monopoly, can vary $1.71 depending on where you buy it. Walgreen's was the most expensive, selling the game for $5.95, while K-mart sold the same game for $4.24. Walgreen's sold the Aggravation game the cheapest though, at $3.09 while Penney's was the highest at $4.89.

Comparison shopping showed that a 100 per cent polyester tie sold for $2.77 at Mho's Value and for $3.50 at Sohn's. The price of an acrylic sweater ranged from $5 at Gail's to $4.97 at K-mart.

Merchants suggested that quality is a factor to be considered in price differences.

All the stores surveyed had English Leather gift sets at the same price, suggesting that the cost of cologne will not vary much from store to store.

Overall no store was consistently the highest or lowest on a list of items. Carl Richell, manager of the Pet Center, said, "We're not affected by high prices. Pet stay the same, but aquariums have gone up." He said that a lot of people buy pets as Christmas presents.

Ties are still good Christmas gifts, according to Eric Clatts, assistant manager for Sohn's at the mall. "People make the financial sacrifice in order to buy better goods for Christmas. Shirts are big items, but leather coats sell regardless of price," he said.

"Money is light so people arc spreading it out so that they don't have to pay out at once. But our sales are great."

Peace, health, jobs, freedom are stuff of season's wishes

By Dave Heun
Student Writer

The "Christmas wish" means different things to different people, as evidenced by a random survey of SIU faculty members.

These are few of the responses to the question, "What is your Christmas wish for '71?"

SIU President Warren W. Brandt said, "My wish is that the spirit of Christmas become a year long phenomenon for everyone."

Sandra Nelson, advertising instructor: "That my students that expect to graduate, do in fact graduate, and get jobs in advertising."

Harlan Mendenhall, journalism lecturer: "Santa came early for me, I already got my wish. A student of mine just brought in a case of Coors gift wrapped and all."

Ernest Aix, associate professor in sociology: "I wish peace for everyone."

Ellen Dugan, graduate assistant in the English Department: "Peace on earth and good will among men would be a good wish."

Susan Thrasher, graduate assistant in economics: "To keep getting the Federal Reserve Bulletin that comes out every year."

Marvin Kleinau, assistant professor in speech: "Good health to all."

Savings club members think of Christmas year-around

By Jan Clifford
Student Writer

Participants in Christmas savings clubs at local banks have already begun saving for next season.

The Christmas savings club members at the University Bank of Carbondale started saving three weeks ago for next season. The bank uses $2, $5, and $10 denominations for savings plans. A payment is supposed to be made every week but it is usually left up to the individual, according to a bank spokesman. A payment may be skipped or four or five payments made at once, the spokesman said. The savings club earns 4 per cent interest.

The end of November is the starting point for the club at The Bank of Carbondale, according to a teller there. The savings plans of $1, $2, $5, and $10 are set up on payments in a coupon booklet form. Members pay as often as they want, the teller said. No interest is earned by the club. This may be a drawback although participation in the program has increased, possibly due to current economic uncertainty, the teller explained.

Participants in the savings club at the First National Bank & Trust Co. began saving for next year on Dec. 1. The club runs for 50 weeks and checks are mailed out to patrons on Nov. 15, according to Anita Ragdale, assistant cashier. The club pays no interest so "whatever you put in, you get in return," she said. There are six savings plans which include 50 cents, $1, $2, $3, $5, and $10 payments a week. Savers can accumulate from $25 to $500 for a 50-week period.

The Carbondale National Bank has three savings plans, $1, $2, and $5 per week, which began in November, according to Dennis Adams, vice president. The $5 a week savings plan is the most popular, Adams said. The club has a fairly steady amount of participation. The club runs for 50 weeks and pays no interest, Adams said.

Yule foods as different as people of world

By Tom Tischhauser
Student Writer

Christmas has a heritage of many different foods because of the many ethnic groups within the United States which cling to their homeland traditions. Each particular region of the United States also has its favorite holiday dishes.

A variety of beverages and "showoff" desserts are most prevalent at Christmas, said Ms. Trish Drayton, professor of Food and Nutrition. During the season, plenty of aromatic thirst-quenching drinks are served hot, cold, mulled or chilled. Some of these taste treats are Christmas Punch, Festive Eggnog, Wassail and Russian Tea. Many of these holiday drinks contain a variety of liqueurs, such as glogg, a Norwegian drink of bourbon, whiskey and fruits.

Christmas desserts are decorative and cherished by the baker at Christmas-time. Fruit cakes, cookies, sweet dessert breads, candies, Christmas pies, plum pudding and cakes are all holiday favorites.

Many people have their Christmas feast in the afternoon. The American family dinner features turkey, chicken, duck, goose or ham. Steaming bowls of potatoes, sweet potatoes, green vegetables, dressing, and gravy crowd the table. Dishes of cranberry sauce, nuts and fruits add a festive air to the meal.

The Old English dinner included roast pheasant, boar's head, brown, and mutton pies. The mince pie developed from mutton pies. The pies were originally baked in the shape of a manger. Plum pudding was also developed in Great Britain. It contains raisins, dried citrus fruits, beef suet, sugar and spices.

In the late 1400s, King Henry VII introduced the wassail bowl to England. The bowl consists of hot ale, spices and toasted apples. Wassail comes from the Old English words that mean "be thou well."

At Christmas time, the French enjoy Strasbourg (bier) pie and black pudding.

The German people originated roast goose for the Christmas dinner.

People in Italy fast the day before Christmas. On Christmas day, however, they feast on baked Magi cakes (small wafers), fried eels, chicken and pork.

The Swedes celebrate the Yuletide dinner with "lutfisk," the catch of the season, and a special sauce. The Swedes also enjoy julgröt, a pudding made of rice and milk.

The Norwegian Christmas pudding contains an almond. The people believe that the person who finds the almond in his portion will be the next to get married.

A Serbian Christmas cake, called "chestnutta," contains a silver coin. The coin serves as a token of good luck to the person who finds it in a piece of cake. The Serbs also serve roast pig in honor of Bogich, an ancient sun god whose name now means Christmas.

Philippine people eat their favorite dish "colacion," which is cooked fruit with various sprouts.

Remember, it's the thought that counts

By Joel Spener
Student Writer

Christmas is usually a time, when it comes to being kind and friendly that no limits are placed. After all, as Andy Williams once said, “It’s the most wonderful time of the year.”

But for those of less than great wealth, it’s often tough to find the means to provide gifts for all those brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts, cousins and grandparents, nephews and nieces. Especially when that thought comes up: “They’re going to get me something.”

For those of you, who need to buy what seems like thousands of presents, and are low of funds, here’s a few suggestions, if you want to spend less than $2 per present.

Other than the annual supply of after-shave lotion that your father will undoubtedly receive, or a fresh supply of new socks, buy him a set of poker chips, priced at $1.98.

Your mother probably still has enough bath powder and comb-and-brush sets to get through another year. One possible solution is two copies of TV Mirror, so your mother can find out a month in advance of everyone else if Chuck will live or die on “All My Children.” Another is to get some stationary printed with your mother’s name only, (give her a sense of independence.)

But don’t buy your a mother a pair of pantyhose. She probably won’t like the ones you buy her (and if you happen to be male, you’ll get a lot of funny looks from clerks and other shoppers. Brothers and sisters are easy to buy gifts for under $2. For little brothers and sisters, discount stores have toys and games that are low cost and not damaged. My favorite was a stuffed monkey with a banana in its hand. (Believe me, it’s cute.)

If you don’t want to buy toys, or if your brothers and sisters are not little, paperback books or 45 rpm records are usually received well. Some popular 8-track tapes can be found for 99 cents.

One of the most popular types of gifts given at Christmas are those made by the giver, such as fruit cakes and other pastries, wood carvings, small ceramics items, and even items made of paper.

There are various books about how to make these items and the books often are not expensive. Christmas need not be only for those with a lot of money to spend. The original theme of Christmas was not to help sale quotas, but to spread peace and goodwill. When you go shopping, remember that the giving of gifts grew out of the festival of Christmas, not Christmas from gift-giving. The old adage still goes, “It’s not the gift that counts, but the thought behind the gift.” Merry Christmas, two dollars worth.

DAILY EGYPTIAN CHRISTMAS SPECIAL, DEC. 11, 1975, PAGE 27
The message:

Separate strands of creation are rejoined

Editor's note: This is the first part of a five-part series, presented complete in this section of the Daily Egyptian. Subsequent parts are on Pages 32 and 33, 34, 35 and 36, and 42 and 43.

God's relation to humanity often is portrayed in Scripture as a marriage vine, a compact of love between a man and a woman. "As the bridegroom rejoices over the bride, so shall your God rejoice over you," says the prophet in Isaiah 62:5.

Through sexuality, human love is "enfleshed," and in a fuller sense, the "enfleshment" of divine love within humanity is the event celebrated at Christmas, the incarnation of Christ.

Both in Scripture and in church tradition, Christ often is referred to as the "bridegroom" of the church, called the "bride." Entitled "The Sanctified Tie," the series was written by Associated Press Religion Writer George W. Cornell and illustrated by AP Newsfeatures artist Larry Zwart.

Cornell, AP's religion specialist for 25 years, also is author of six books on religious topics, his latest being "The Untamed God," published by Harper & Row.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

One who had seemed far off drew near and a lonely heart quickened at his approach. His whispered call resonated. His distant image took on that of a long-lost friend. "Behold, he comes, leaping upon the mountains, bounding over the hills," goes the Biblical Song of Songs, "My beloved is like a gazelle, or a young stag."

They met. They spoke. Their hands touched. They belonged together. "For to, the winter is past, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of singing has come, and the voice of the turtle dove is heard in our land." That is the way of the bond between a man and woman, of the blending of parts into wholeness. It is the way of love.

In that basic sense, it also is the message of Christmas, the coming of Jesus among the people, of the realization of God's presence directly within humanity, of the separate strands of creation rejoined, ultimately, of the two reunited in a shared domain.

"And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us," says John's gospel. "For God so loved the world... The Great Love, they say, was love. Scripture so portrays the relationship of God and his people, their "husband" who "will betroth you to me for ever," as Hosea 2 puts it. Jesus is described in Matthew 9:15 and elsewhere as the "bridegroom" of his lovers, and the kingdom of heaven or "the marriage feast" as in Matthew 22:2. The churches, in Revelation 19:9 and the title of the book are called the "bride."

That imagery has continued as a part of Christian tradition. The great second century church father Origen, speaking of Christ and his church to a marriage union, says "they are no longer two but one flesh."

Scholars point out that the symbolism is not meant to imply gender in God, who is conceived as the universal fullness of being without limitations of gender, but that it does dramatize the deep significance of the human drive for sexual completion of self through another.

It is a profound impulse, common throughout the world's creatures, the call of each sex for the other, the yearning for consummation of the sexually partial being in the complementary being of another, the hunger to be whole.

In humanity, it takes in potentialities far beyond our reach.

The Sanctified Tie

merely animal species, qualities of shared caring, sympathies, understanding and loyalty, of mutual giving and combined strengths, as well as the special human capacities for imagination, delight and bearing grace.

It is the sanctified union of the human components, what fuses a male and female into enlarged personhood.

"Male and female he created them," goes the ancient count in Genesis 1, "And God blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth and subdue it."

Their distinction by sex, and union through it, had divine sanction. God saw everything that he had made, and, "It was very good."

Together, the couple "become one flesh," Genesis 2:24-25 adds. "And the man gave the woman his name."

In humanity, it takes in potentialities far beyond our reach.

From the start, in the biblical perspective, sexual relationships constituted an ennobled estate.

"Sex is of divine ordaining."

notes Bible scholar Walter Russ­ell Bowie, "It is a gift of God," says evangelist Billy Graham.

But in the modern atmosphere, it has been widely de­filed as a mere physical process, a casual affair, as "recreational sex" merely to quench a natural appetite, with­out its inclusively unitifying sig­nificance, without the expanded personal involvement or perpet­uated oneness, without the com­prehensively enriching power of making two people one. In con­sequence, many social analysts say sex has been cheapened and trivialized.

"The celebration of sex," noted psychiatrist Rollo May calls it. "He says that casual sex "becomes boring" and mere sensuality "becomes stultifying. When sex is only sensuality, you sooner or later turn against sex itself... The sexual rev­olution comes finally back on it­self not with a bang but a whimper."

What's left, says social analyst Vance Packard, is a "senseless sex"

Thus, a generation that out­wardly glorifies sex, proclaim­ing "free sex" and "swinging sex," that craves its movie screens, magazines and novels with sex, is the one that floods the bookstalls with "how-to" manuals, insisting sex as a mechanism, somehow, it seems, has reduced it, not enhanced it.

The results are "antiso­sexual, not prosexual," downsizing its impact. Like a Harvard theologian Harvard Cuts, and this is the magazine, a kind of modern cultural symbol of sophisticated sex, he says its central motif is to say cool and detached and avoid seriousness.

"When playtime is over," he noted, the playmate's function (Continued on next page)
It seems a bleak put-down, indeed, for an essential endowment of humanity, for the absolute prerequisite for preserving life and the deepest capacity for human interpersonal communication.

But sex, like all other matters, can be falsified, distorted and rendered into an empty nothingness.

Some people, both debunkers of religion and those with shouted notions of it, have spread a shallow but popularized misrepresentation that the sex act was humanity's "original sin," but this is utterly contrary to authentic Judaism and Christianity, and also to the Biblical account.

It explicitly states that the basic human mixture was the group for dominating power, to "be like God." Genesis 3:5 puts it, to be personality supreme, the apogee of streak that makes tyrants and that cuts everyone off from total empathy with others.

"through that self-existing tendency, extending through history," Judaism-Christianity holds that human beings sense their underlying loneliness, a lack of complete rapport with another, the naked essential loneliness through their own consciousness that does not fully trust love itself.

Sometimes - from God and others - is the sin, the isolating itch for self-deception. Each person, in a way, thus seeks to separate, to preserve complete rapport with another, with someone, longing to be totally loved and totally understood, but at the same time, wary of giving those very qualities, throwing up against guards, distorting, ashamed.

Then, "they knew they were naked," Genesis 2:25 says, and they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves aprons. They also hid, in their observation for power, and knowing it.

The covet defensiveness had nothing directly to do with sex, although it, like all life, reflects the degradation that comes from the self-absorbed tendency to dominate, strut and exploit, as well as the contrasting blessedness that comes through interflowing affection, gratitude and trusting fidelity.

In a way, at least ever since Sigmund Freud, sexual attitudes have been seen as a measure of the mental health of society, whether it was rid with bluster, suppressed fears, aggressions, violence and perversions, or whether it reflected balance, stability, confidence and some semblance of harmony among its people.

While psychologists, as well as theologians and other specialists, applaud the more open, forthright concern with sex, freeing it from Victorian attitudes that treated it as sleazy, they deplore the contemporary excesses that have tended to depersonalize it and drain it of meaning and value. Concurrent with the tendency has come a wave of challenges to various other standards and social norms, increased violence and crime, a mounting cast of impudence and apathy and rising rates of divorce and suicide, along with intensified obsessions with non-comittal sex and voyeurism.

Psychologist Herbert Hendin, whose new book, "The Age of Sensation," reports on extensive analysis of 400 students from across the country, says they are grasping either for "detached sensation or machineline emotional numbness in a succession of fragmented sex experiences without meaning or purpose."

"Spaced out," is their typical term, he notes, to blot out and bury their own feelings and identities.

Although the casual carnalist and the sloganist who has been thought to indicate greater sexual harmony, he says it actually has meant "cynicism, disillusionment and helplessness that was rare among the young 30 years ago" and increasing "aggression of young men against young women."

"Turning a woman into merely an object for self-satisfaction is probably the most prevalent form of vandalism among young men," he says, while women's attitude is marked by suppressed emotions, detached casual sex and "nurtness in limited, controlled experiences" to try to barricade themselves against the inner turmoil.

"Twenty years ago, detachment, impaired ability to feel pleasure and fragmentation were considered signs of schizophrenia," he notes, adding that those tendencies in modern sexuality offer a "measure of our social difficulties."

Many psychologists say that distorted ideas of women's liberation and sex-role equality also are causing increased impotence in women and other sexual pathology. Psychiatrist George L. Ginsberg says that the loss of potency occurs among men who feel threatened by women's attempt to be passive in sexual matters.

All the while, sexual relations are tested, strained, tapped, witnessed, photographed and subjected to glandular measurements, as well as examined through interviews and charted on statistical graphs, growing it seems like some sort of malfunctioning mass machine, all done in the name of stepping up proficiency.

"Privacy and decriminalization, both of which seem to snowball as the overarching fenomenon..."

sects, as portrayed in the Bible, is a vital, revealing and decisive mystery in the flow of human existence, and it is dealt with regularly and forthrightly.

It is seen both as creative and clarifying, a force of human continuity, unity and knowledge.

Instead of treating it in the mechanical, exhibitionistic or sniggering ways common in modern times, or the hush-bash circumlocutions of the past, Scripture handles it attentively, seriously and frankly.

"The Bible, after all, is a very sexy book," observes Scripture scholar Tom Horner. "It told it as it was, so to speak, centuries before it was fashionable to do so."

An ethic, upheld it as integral to persons, was also developed, culminating in the teachings of Jesus.

Scripture regards sex as the very axis of life, both in a person's beginnings and in tangible projection into the future, and also as a window into people's understanding of their being.

Through sex, one comes to "know" another, as Scripture phrases it, by opening some secret avenue of knowing within the self.

Theologian-psychoanalyst, Eward Hilter says the Biblical point is that through sex, one "discovers something of another being, and thus also of himself, that he had not, from the inside, known before."

"Through his physical existence he has received a gift that transcends physical existence," Hilter writes. "Sex is in some sense sacramental, in that a spiritual gift has emerged through a physical act."

Awareness of the implications of the mystery, and the respect it justified, came only gradually in the unfolding centuries of biblical history, as humanity's understanding of God's intent developed.

But from the first, Scripture saw the human being as a psychosomatic whole, body and spirit, much in line with insights of modern psychology, and far in advance of ancient Oriental thought or the Greek dualism of Plato.

The Sanctified Tie

Part 2

These philosophies considered humans as formed of two divergent halves, the reasoning, elevated soul and the corrupt flesh of earthly passions - a disparaging view of sex that infiltrated post-Biblical church interpretations.

It also gave rise to the past hypocritical prudery, which outwardly disdained sex as a lowly, carnal instinct, necessary but not nice.

But the Bible, although often ignorantly blamed for these attitudes, does not employ nor expose them, but rather consistently and plainly treats sex as a God-given, indispensable aspect of the total personality.

In the Scriptural handling of the subject, "the psychology is that of the whole man, who manifests his total self through each of his physical acts," says Bible scholar Otto J. Baab.

Just as for other acts impinging on others, persons, their property, on the community and its interdependency, rules were set to protect sexual integrity. "Thus shalt not commit adultery," specifies one of the Ten Commandments.

It points up the special value and obligations inherent in marriage. Bible experts say that in origin, the commandment was applied only to wives, and their illicit lovers, to provide assurance that a wife's offsprings were also the husband's.

In that patriarchal culture, men were deemed guilty of adultery only if they had sex relations with another man's wife, though indulging the parentage of her children, but wives were considered guilty if they had relaitons with any man other than their husband.

"There was no recognition of the husband's adultery unless he infringed on the rights of another man, that is, another husband," writes Scripture scholar Zollan Fike. It was a double standard in a time of dominating male prerogatives, yet hinged on an abiding fact - that motherhood is directly apparent, but not fatherhood.

However, interpretations since that period, including modern divorce law, generally have come to define adultery as either husband or wife having sexual relations outside marriage. It is regarded, in a living marriage, as a betrayal of trust, as disloyalty toward the closest partner.

It is "less sinful for its sexual content than for its violation of trust and integrity," says noted psychiatrist Karl Menninger. It is "the kind of infidelity and betrayal which may not break the law but does break the heart."

The Bible, in its straightforward realism, is threaded with accounts of sexual relationships, both sustaining and exploitative, of human deceit, jealousies and barbarity, of Strikingly, although the pill and penicillin were hailed as making casual sex safe without hazards of pregnancy or disease, the venereal disease rate has doubled and illegitimate births have tripled in the last decade.

But the physical and practical problems and technical procedures are only the surface indications of the personal toll in emotional anguish, psychological disturbances and troubled futures. While these can't be measured scientifically, statistically, studies have shown increased hospital admissions of young people under 25 with "character disorder" difficulties.

Psychiatrist Francis Brace-land, former president of the American Psychiatric Association, says premarital sex has significantly increased the number of young people in mental hospitals. At the same time, the suicide rate of young people 15 to 25 has doubled in the past decade, to about 22 out of 100,000 young people annually.

Nevertheless, the young go on having babies they don't want, growing married and there they want to, taking jobs before they're prepared, and call it the "new freedom." "Freedom is precisely what is being lost," observes theologian Harvey C. Gibson, Jr., "and today we're losing control of their lives."

In the name of freedom, many have knocked formalized marriage. "Who needs it?" some say. "We've done with each other."

In a limited sense, if they're fully dressed and all the other, they're right—religious.

As understood both intellectually and in the churches, marriage is not a step implemented by the state or any other institution. It is an initiation, Before the persons themselves, before God, in their pledge commitment to each other.

Clergy and others serve only as witnesses, as corroborators of the pact, which the couple make themselves. It is consummated by the sexual union and is not considered sealed until it takes place.

But in any society, such covens are never entirely private concerns. No marries to a couple is an isolated emotion, the poet-clergyman John Donne put it. The family is the substratum of the social order, with responsibilities to those immediately around and mutual concerns extending to the wider families and communities of which they are a part, and for support of them, marriage is undertaken publically, on the record, licensed, witnessed and registered. Maintaining the social order depends on it.

It also helps keep the marriage intact, not only in being able to live it openly and to be accepted socially, without equivocations or confessions, but also in being able to bear it through the rough going.

Pseudo-liberation bullies people into conformity

(Continued from previous page) protects both parties against overt injustice, in regard to children, property, and other matters, in case the union does turn cold and break up.

None of these documents exist in the current fashion among some young people of cohabiting without ritual or record. "Who needs a divorce?" some ask. "It's just a piece of paper."

But there is scarcely any important field of human relations that operates reliably without law, whether it's race relations, economic dealings, medical practice, schoolrooms, towns or nations, even if it's just in playing baseball or negotiating traffic.

Responsibility, for the most honorable people, needs butresses, tensions, standards, reminders.

For example, sex guidance counselor Sylvanus M. Duvall says she's never heard of young people suggesting that laws on racial rights be abandoned. Law and love are not separate, she adds.

For some, however, the assumption seems to be that sexual ties are that important. Unmarried or premarital sex is all right "as long as nobody gets hurt." This viewpoint asserts, or, as the statistical surveys declare, as long as "affection is present."

This can be rationalized to imply that so long as they like each other, they can go to bed together. Such an attitude, however, suggests that the act can be isolated within itself, cutoff from the total context of the couple's lives, from what went before and what comes afterward, heedless of social sanction or awareness, disconnected from all possible effects on them or others.

Without the time-seasoned growth of deep friendship, caring about each other's needs and mutual obligations to them, such words as "commitment" in sexual relations can be a highly deceptive criterion, which can be transformed in the aftermath.

Professor Robert P. O'Neil and University of Michigan Catholic sociologist Michael A. Donovan, discussing youth patterns, cite the frequent situation in which single young adults regard their sexual activity as not fleeting but casual but reflecting a "commitment." On and Donovan add:

"Total dedication to another person cannot be genuine if it is but one of several such commitments made over a two- or three-year span. Genuine commitments based on a total relationship cannot be made and withdrawn in a matter of weeks. If this occurs, some of the effects of promiscuity will be evident in the personality."

"In a book, "Sex Thoughts for Contemporary Christians," O'Neil and Donovan say that because the sex act "involves the total person," any "sexual activity that is not founded upon a close relationship is exploitive or mere tension reduction."

They say young couples must realize because sexual activity is the expression of their relationship, not its cause. Only that degree of love that has been built up outside sexual activity can be expressed in sex. Premature sexual acts can "short-circuit" the full development of love.

If a young man says, in effect, "I must have you," he quite clearly is not identifying himself, identifying it solely with the sexual act, and love is far broader than that. Sexual union, by its nature, demands a certain exclusiveness, possessiveness and permanence, and when any of these elements is uncertain, "destructive tensions" result, O'Neil and Donovan say.

Nevertheless, on most campuses, there are no longer any curfews to hide behind nor separate dorms, nor administrative restrictions on living arrangements. Among male students, the "cool" hanker comically portrays women as mere body-objects. However infantile, the swagger talk about sex triumphs can exert a group-think pressure on younger students, and make them feel abnormal if they don't go along with it. It tends to harden into a corporate campus mold.

Similar pressures row are evident among young women, giving rise to the new phenomenon of the "embarrassed virgin." While women used to be under peer pressure to resist sex, they now — by traits of the sex-equality drive — seem under pressure to submit to it. Harvard theologian Harvey Cox says the liberation really needed by the young is to be freed of the public constraints toward subcultural conformity that push many adol­escents into whatever is "in" at the moment.

That would include freedom to say "no." It has been said that the strength of the "sex urge" is measured by the strength of "no" to others.

Despite impressions of free-wheeling campus sex, however, many students still show deep devotion, and eventually marry.

Sometimes, the shibboleth of "sexual frustration" is raised to promote casual sex, implying that the unarticulated sexual urge can lead to neurosis, that self-discipline is harmful. This is a misinterpretation and vulgar mis­interpretation of psychoanalysis, psychoanalyst Viktor Frankl, and has done "a good deal of in­jury by nourishing neurotic sexual anxieties."

Modern case studies, psychological insights, church teachings and Biblical premises all seem to suggest that those who defer sexual relations until after genuine mutual communications, understanding, promise and trust have formed, and who have lastingly committed themselves to each other, have the best chance of enduring happiness.

It's a big order, it usually is a long process, requiring symp­athy, sensitivity and the abili­ty to care for one another as much as for self. It also re­pects the pervasive force of sex as a sensuality.

As psychoanalyst Erich Fromm puts it, "to love a person productively implies to care and be basically responsible for his life, not only for his physical comfort, but for his growth and development of all his hu­man powers."

Church shifting from negative view of sexuality

BY GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

In an age of vaunted "new freedoms," the old, time-engrained standards for human sexuality often are scorned as repressive, guilt-ridden hang-ups, as a dour version of it, a warped "stamp-out-sea" mentality. But the actual objective is precisely the opposite. It is to honor sex, to respect its power; to recognize and maintain its value, to affirm its dynamism in an age that tends to trivialize and negate it.

The purpose of the rules, says Anglican theologian John Macquarie, is to guard and hallow "the sacred gift of love." It is so commonly cheapened and distorted that to abandon institutional norms would be a "threat to the very survival of such love."

That invisible bond is enfolded between a man and woman through sex, and in a wider sense, the "enfoldment" of love is the message of Christmas, the union of the divine and humanity in the incarnation of Jesus.

In that event, as in others, Biblical faith esteems physical reality, the sinews and the senses of earth. Although these are abrogated in Oriental religion, Judaic-Christianity sees them as bearing the imprint of God, and despite past Church insistence, that sex speaks vibrantly itself well only when it speaks totally and truthfully.

Noted psychoanalyst Erik H. Erikson says loving demands "a selectivity," and "pre-supposes both identity and fidelity."

"It is an axiom in psychology," said famed psychiatrist Karl Menninger, "that a plurality of direct sexual outlets indicates the very opposite of what it is popularly assumed to indicate. Dividing the sexual interest into several objectives diminishes the total sexual gratification." It marks a "deficiency" in capacities, he adds, not fullness.

This doesn't mean that anyone or one is ever to be totally utterly suffocated. In fact, Biblical faith asserts that we chronically are not faultless and whole, but limited, shortighted, prone to vanity, deceit, anxiety, exploitation, and other sexual, sexually and in other ways, we do glorify.

But both also stress that to guard and revere what God often uses outside the religious establishment.

The Sanctified Tie

Part 4

Nonjudgmental, and seemingly ac­ rayed against it, to deepen faith and enlarge its vision of truth.

This is not to imply that all psychotherapy is necessarily beneficial, and preeminent minds in that field recognize its shortcomings, disputes and shifting ideas, that it is barely peripherally movements and fadings.

But the fundamental principle, that people need to face honestly their hidden fears, hates, self-rejection, shame and concealed desires and failures, and in gathering with them, to affirm their own individualities and potentialities, could have been a leaf out of Jesus' teachings.

"Those who are well have no need of a physician, but those who are sick," he said. He said he came to help only the troubled, not the smugly self-righteous. It is from within, "out of the heart," that goodness and evil flow, he said, not from public posturing or pious pose.

Hypocrisy outwardly "lin­ guishes you before men, but God knows your hearts...First cleanse the inside of the cup that the outside also may be made clean...And you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free." Freud himself, contrary to the popular image of him as a master of restraints and bavioral standards, actually taught that the sex instinct must be restrained to establish harmony of parts with the whole, to prevent aggressions and reactions to barbarism. He held that civilization itself depends on curbing the monstrous sexual drives through sublimation into other creative energies, that civilization is impossible without it.

However, most modern psychotherapy has moved away from Freud's thesis of necessary repression, maintaining that sexual expression can be healthily untrammelled and not destructive if it is honest and the integrity of self and the partner is maintained. But this, in itself, demands limits, in­ cluding:

The sex act must convey love, which includes mutual de­ dication to the other, or it is by nature a lie, a falsification of it. If it is random, without sin­ cere communication, it is un­ off from the personality in time, emotional content and fo­ cused identities — what psycho­ therapy has moved away from, and of "schizoid world" detachment of self from it, impoverishing emotional capacities.

"It is regarded by naria­ cism, such as denying one's masculinity, as it often is for a young man, or to get at­ tention, prove femininity or bols. But to a love woman, it is exploitative, pow­ er-manipulative and alienating, an "inversion" debilitating to feelings.

Union of divine, humanity esteems physical reality

If sex is simply for its own ends, as biological gratification, and not as a means of expression, it is emptied of meaning, makes the partner into an impersonal object and makes "the sex act itself a commodity," says psychiatrist Viktor E. Frankl. It is a "thoroughly decadent sensualism...detracting to sex" and a cause of "abnormal psychosexual" development.

If sex is contrived, such as performed as a favor without wishing it, it is reduced to a disassociated mechanism. If it is dishonest, such as either partner "pretending to love while not loving or even pretending to enjoy the act while not enjoying it," says psychiatrist Seymour L. Halleck, it can induce guilt, lowered self-esteem and psychologically damaging carry-overs.

If sex is in any way compartmentalized and not assimilated with the total self, including obligations, feelings and continuity, it is fractional and psychologically divisive, since sex belongs to the whole human being. The value put on it is the value put on the self, since sex involves the whole personality.

Psychologist Robert P. O'Neil and college-priest-counselor Michael A. Donovan, in a joint analysis of the matter, say that since sex acts involve a "total interpersonal relationship, the "sexual" sexual relationships most invariably lead to an unstructuring of certain ego functions necessary for mature interpersonal relationships. Research in this area documents the negative effects.

Since intercourse means "giving of the whole self," those who engage in multiple sexual experiences do not in fact intend to give themselves wholly to the partner," O'Neil and Donovan add. Se delimiting, sexual feelings inevitably become "blunted...even destroyed."

"Sexual union is such a total human act that if used irresponsibly it can lead to cynicism, frigidity, desensitization to other human values and emotions. Ultimately it can result in the supreme tragedy of dooming a person to lifelong unhappiness...the inability to love at all."

As for the moral-ethical issues involved, the voice of the churches has been less legalistic, more tentative assertions, even as their authority diminishes over changing sex practices. Sexual standards can no longer be dictated by ecclesiastical decree, observes Catholic theologian Joseph Blenecko. He and many other church scholars put part of the blame on the church's past shallow, negative handling of the subject, without the Bible's positive approach to it.

The church for a long time has not been reflecting the true Christian approach to this subject," says sociologist David R. Mace, a leading Protestant specialist on sex guidance. He says that once the church abandoned their "negative and fear-ridden patterns" of thinking about sex, they can offer relevant insights into it.

The important task, he adds, is "bringing religion and sex back together, and ending the long and costly alienation that has kept them apart."

The churches, like much of the rest of society, are groping in the current flux and confusion about the matter, searching for ways to remedy and illuminate it. Several have tried in recent studies and statements, some of them around keen controversy.

United Presbyterians, United Methodists, British Quakers, the United Church of Christ, the Lutheran Church in America, among others have sought to offer fuller understandings, both from modern psychological and Biblical perspectives.

Typifying these efforts, the Lutheran body in 1967 declared that sex is wrong only in a: "covenant of fidelity," normally expressed in marriage, but that such commitment can be real outside legal wedlock.

Distinguishing between such a "covenant" and legal contracts, the church noted definitions of marriage have varied in different periods and cultures. The full potential of sexual union, fostering genuine intimacy and personal growth, is realized only in a "permanent covenant of marital fidelity," the church said, "but this does not preclude the possibility of a covenedanted relationship that is not a legally contracted marriage."

Moreover, the church said, "a covenant of fidelity can be broken in reality whether the union terminates formally through legal action or displays external solidarity." Such situations remain only "arrangements of convenience," the document says, external trappings of a union dead through human failings.

"Sexual exploitation in any situation either personally or commercially, inside or outside legally sanctioned marriage, is destructive of God's good gift and of man's integrity," the church said.

The assessment squares with soud contemporary psychology. The effort, says Lutheran Harold R. Haas, both a theologian and a psychological counseling specialist, was to "draw the church closer to the people..."

Christmas craftiness

Are crafts for Christmas gifts and decorations a popular activity? Well, the annual Christmas Craft Workshop sponsored by the Carbondale Park District on Dec. 6 attracted 52 people for several hours of work and instruction.

"We all had a good time and many of the people said they had finished their Christmas lists," remarked Candy Cash, art consultant who directed the workshop.

Crafts demonstrated and practiced included soap decoupaging, the making of wreaths of cornhusks and ribbons, macrame for pot holders fashioned from lanyard cord, sand painting and the making of "God's eyes" from yarn and sticks.

A crafts workshop for children will be held from 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 13, at the Community Center, 208 W. Elm. Cost is $2 for materials.

Divine love is mirrored in human love

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

It is an offering, yet a gift. It is worthless, yet richly eloquent. It is surrender, yet also exaltation. It is gentle, yet fervent; tender, yet powerful. It is physical, yet deeply spiritual; emotional yet mental. It involves only two selves, but there is something more. It is baffling, peculiar, amazing. Some thinkers say it reflects the "image Dei"—the image of God.

That is the profundity of human sexual union in its real sense, a phenomenon that leaves the walls of separation and loneliness, that foreshadows our participations and contrariness into wholeness, that joins the fragments of life into a new, unifying identity.

"A great mystery," the apostle Paul said of it in perplexity. It is highly paradoxical, self-directing, yet other-directing, seeking, yet accepting; assertive, yet responsive; giving, yet receiving; migratory, yet enlighening; subtle, yet robust; in time, yet out of time; odd and funny, yet fundamental and sublime.

When genuine, it cannot be willed, forced or rationalized; yet it has a will, force and wisdom of its own. If calculated or laborized at, it's lost; if grasped for, it's gone. In essence, it cannot be done; it acts of itself, an award, a grace, with its own life.

It is the occasion that reveals what persons really are at root, not merely, not themselves in isolation, but beings in relation. It is when the "I" and the "thou," those divided, yet reciprocal parts of existence, become an actual, living "we," and radiant that.

Among mortals, it is "the excellent union of all," says philosopher John B. Greenfelder. It is "more an expression of love" as "communions love," "it is a unity itself." A "mutual completion," say Catholic educators Mary P. and John J. Ryan. Theologian Alan Watts says it is "the most vivid psychic intercharge," as if "a new identity were formed." Sociologist-marriage counselor David R. Mace calls it "an incarnation of love."

That, in a fuller sense, also is the occurrence of Christmas, the advent of Jesus, the incarnation of God's love within humanity.

Sexual union, of course, is on a subsidiary, installable level, a passing reflection in miniature, as some analysts regard it. Yet strangely, in its authenticity, it exceeds in moments the individualities of either partner or the sum of both in its greater, surpassing awareness—what the poet calls ecstasy or rapture, a glimpse of perfection that eradicates everything else and all, that brings a sense of oneness with the universe.

"An echo of divine beatitude," says French theologian A. B. Hof. "A subtle directing, connecting force.... It sanctifies many of the lesser acts...." Theological Watts terms it as "mystical, self-transporting quality that transports the persons beyond themselves. It is related to the mystery of life," says Lutheran theologian Jacob Hauer. "It is this experience we become dimly aware of the meaning of existence."

It also is the potential time of a miracle—the seeding of new life, of two lives combined on one living into another.

These aspects, in some cultures and periods, have led to sex being elevated to the status of "god" or "goddesses," the cults of sacred sexuality to fertility that proliferated over the ancient Near East in democracies such as Dionysus, earth-mother Cybele, Ishtar and As-tarte, with their temple prostitutes and orgiastic worship. They involved an identity of sex, indiscrimination, impersonal, tricking it not in a deep, binding means of interpersonal union, but as a vague end in itself, much like modern hedonists.

"As-tarte still is alive and well, in heavily secularized garb," says sociologist Peter Berger, citing the contemporary theologies and systems that treat sex as a precision mechanism and sensuality as salvation. "To an extent, it (As-tarte) has become the identity of the sexual revolution."

Its casual "had-and-farewell" kind of sex is far removed from a dedicated, durable marriage, in which two distinct personalities become "one flesh," as scripture puts it in Is 11, but the current meaning sex is seen by psychologists and theologians as the major, destructive threat to sexual potentiality. Two can't become one in a process of blunted, variable identities.

But in its true mode, the sexual tie is rooted in Judeo-Christian thought as somehow mirroring, or creating the totally loving part of God and its outpouring for mankind.

The great Protestant theologian, Karl Barth, maintained that God's divinity, with its inclusive, interacting community of being, corresponded with the sexual union of man and woman, by which they together make up an inclusive "new whole" that reflects the divine image in which they were created.

"Man is directed to woman and woman to man, each being for the other a horizon and focus, righting for the other a center and source," Barth wrote. "This mutual orientation is not of being, each. It is always in relation to their opposite that man and woman are what they are in themselves.

In the Christian concept, God exists "in relationship and fellowship," Barth notes, a trinity of being, and humanity was created in that image, as male and female. While their union offers a glimpse of holiness, he says, they still long for full completion in company with God, the third part of their own ultimately trinitive being.

Theologian-counselor Dwight H. Small says "God's trine being is thus the origin of the model, over against which man is the image." Theologian Norman Pritterer says sexuality is a grounding for response to God in love, and hence a clue to the nature of God himself as love.

While divine love is frequently described as "agape," an utterly self-giving, spontaneous love, it is a new kind of love, human love primarily is considered "erost," a desiring, searching love seeking completion of itself in another through the clash and fusion of other ways.

The word, sex, comes from a Latin root, "secure," meaning cut apart, not whole, not sufficient to himself or herself alone. Plato pictured "eros" as hunting, the other had, the original androgyny, the mytho-dramatic male and half female. In any case, (Continued on next page)

It is an expression of something which runs through the whole creation," observes theologian Rollo May, a "pervasive... give-and-take at every level." Between a man and wife, sexuality is an entity that intercourses. It pervades their whole relationship, makes mutual help, counsel, companion, its own way by its own ways. It is a diffused sexuality, coexistent with personalities, spontaneous, with few imperatives, integrated into the framework of life and love.

Sex cannot be separated — with incurring natural penalties — from love, honor, duty, loyalty, sacrifice, social and religious order. For richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health," says Harvard theologian Harvey Cox. In that context, church thinkers have compared sexual union only to the interchange of persons.

The unity of divine and human natures in Christ, to the soul's unity with God, and also to the bond between Christ and the church, a symbiosis frequent in Scripture. The apostle Paul, in using it, offers a moving portrayal of the husband-wife relationship in Ephesians 5, despite its controversial overtunes of male headship: "The husband is the head of the wife as Christ is the head of the church... Even so, husbands should love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself..." While the spiritual connotations of sexuality may seem far-fetched to the non-religious, a September, 1975, Redbook magazine report of a survey of 18,349 women found that the greater the intensity of a woman's religious convictions, the likelier she is to be "highly satisfied" with sex in marriage. It was a consistent pattern, puzzling to the surveyors, but in line with the high value Judaism-Christianity puts on sex. The sacramental conception of sex has been largely neglected in the modern world, says noted theologian-psychologist Seward Hiltunen, but he adds that it is vital to sound theology. "Sexuality belongs to the mystery of divine revelation."

Like other sacramental acts, it is an outward sign of an inward, spiritual grace. It is an extraordinary endowment, a marvellously communicative channel, a power, a vulnerability, an adoration, a gift, an offering, a dance, a celebration. It is unusual, unexplainable, strange. "Nothing looks the same... The world is amniliated... We give us our own center," hoping for a new world, a new existence. It is the razer's edge, a dazzling balance of anxiety and joy. But "there is sharing takes place which is a new gestalt, a new being, a new field of magnetic force," says May. "A shift in consciousness seems to occur... the awareness of separateness is lost, blotted out in a cosmic feeling of oneness with nature."
Do-it-yourself gifts have economy, individual touch

In these days of spiraling prices, to be cheap and get away with it at Christmas time is difficult. The trick is to give homemade gifts, to comparison shop on supplies and add your own individuality to the gift.

Prices on gift supplies may vary from store to store and the extra foodwork involved in comparison shopping may pay off in added savings. Also, gift materials in unusual places, such as grocery stores, may prove financially beneficial.

Grocery stores provide all the materials needed for three inexpensive gifts: dough art items, candles, and pomander balls.

Anything from Christmas tree ornaments to wall sculpture can be fashioned from baker’s clay, which consists of 1 cup salt and 4 to 1 cup water added to 2 cups all-purpose flour. After the basic mixture is kneaded for about 10-15 minutes, creativity can dictate whether it is rolled, cut, garlic-pressed or braided into shape.

After the items are shaped, they’re either air-dried for 48 hours or baked in a 325-350 degree oven until hard, then finished with acrylic or enamel paint brush or spray. Final finishing of the piece is done with acrylic or polyurethane spray.

Candles, a popular year-round gift, can be homemade. In the supermarket are purchased at the grocery store rather than at a crafts store. A pound box of paraffin at 70 cents will make at least two medium-sized candles. A few centimeters grown in June for 10 cents, and some string for wicking amounts to more than the price of commercially sold candles.

Wax, since it is flammable, must be heated in a double boiler. (This can be made from one pot stuck inside a larger pot of boiling water.) Dyed wax is transferred to a homemade mold consisting of a well-oiled glass jar, orange juice can, or other similar container. (The wicking is suspended from the top of the mold by a pencil or dowel.) A “well” that will form around the wicking should be filled with hot wax, and the candle should be allowed to set for at least 24 hours. While orange juice can molds may be peeled away, glass jars should be broken inside a paper bag.

Pomander balls, a traditional scented Christmas gift, in the South are made from citrus fruits, (such as oranges, lemons or limes), cloves, spices, and bits of fabric. After the fruit is stuffed with cloves, it reas in a mixture of cinnamon, and nutmeg, and allspice for about two days. (The spices “pickle” the fruit, so it doesn’t rot.)

After brushing off the excess spice mixture, the fruit is decked out in bits of lace and velvet ribbon, and can be used as sachets or decorative pieces. (A visit to the fabric store might provide the lace, velvet, and other interesting forms of trim.)

Those who can sew can make a fur pillow for about $3, according to John Jay, manager of So-Pro Fabrics. Jay also mentioned that most fabric prices were stable this year.

Christmas cards can be printed cheaply from linoleum block prints, according to Cheryl Craighead, sales clerk at the 710 Bookstore. A 5x7 linoleum block, a box of cutters, and two tubes of ink cost about $4, and paper costs 25 cents a sheet, with higher prices for higher rag content. (A high rag content gives a smoother finish to a print.) A 26x34 inch sheet of paper will make approximately eight cards.

Ink is spread on the linoleum with a brayer, which is similar to a rolling pin made of rubber. After the paper is pressed on the linoleum, removed, and dried, it can be cut into cards. Any writing on a linoleum print must be done in “mirror writing,” as the block prints in reverse.
