The Day Of Dreams

Southern, rising in recognition and growth in the past ten years, has had in its schools facilities to combat the tidal waves of mid-century migrations. The University has advanced its academic positions through raising its standards and extending its programs in both academic and educational activities. The University has also succeeded in accommodating the influx of students and in maintaining a quality educational standard by which it has been self-allowed, to the end that Southern may be the focal point of educational opportunities.

The deficits have been attacked by the University for as far back as recent times as the deficit of space is permanent in the organic structures. The General Assembly has been attempting to provide such space, in the recent years in order to help the University in its space needs. Despite the problem, however, now that these spaces have been worked out by the University in great quantity, the spirit of the space is that of a definite emphasis.

But all will be undone when these days are over. No matter how and to the gradenesses these last few days may seem, the coming of the season will be welcomed relief. The existing student will soon see into the world of physical and psychological space. We must face the facts.

By Betty Lee Evans
