Saluki fans wait NIT opener

By Mark Kozlowski
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The basketball Salukis were in New York City Friday with only a small band of faithful fans awaiting their first-round National Invitational Tournament game against Pittsburgh Saturday at 6 p.m. (CDT).

Most fans who might have made the trip remained in Southern Illinois awaiting spring break, saving money and hoping SIU will reach the semifinals round March 22—after break begins.

The Salukis play Saturday night before a sprinkling of fans from Southern Illinois who made the trip for the opening round game in Madison Square Garden.

A bus load of players, coaches, coaches' wives, trainers and media personnel departed from the Arena parking lot at 12:30 p.m. Thursday bound for Mount Vernon. The players had a practice session there before buses on to Evansville, Ind., for a flight to New York City.

About 20 persons braved the biting wind to bid the entourage farewell. Most were friends of the travelers or Arena personnel who took a break to wish the team good luck.

Bill Coracy at the B and A Travel Service said Thursday, 46 persons had signed up to take the flight from Evansville to New York. That included 12 players, seven cheerleaders, three coaches, members of the media and team personnel.

Neoma Kinney, Arena ticket manager, was one of the faithful to ride the team off.

"I'm going out next Friday if they're in the finals," she said. The B and A Travel Service has tentatively booked 90 spaces on a plane from Evansville for persons from West Frankfort, Marion, Cairo, Carbondale and other area persons interested in going to the NIT if the Salukis win Saturday and Tuesday. Kinney said.

"A lot of students have approached me on chartering a bus to New York," she revealed. "If we win Tuesday, we may get started on that Wednesday.

"She said many students may decide to travel in car loads for the last two games as students did in 1972 when the Salukis won the tournament.

Many students found the unavailability of low cost transportation and the date of the tournament to be a hindrance to going. The date is somewhat of a problem since the tournament begins the week before spring break.

Gary Palay, a sophomore in radio and television, said he had planned to go no matter what. "I'd still go if I could find a ride."

Palay said he will not go by air because he doesn't have the money. The B and A Travel Agency offered a round trip group plan to New York for $197.73.

He said he could save money by going by bus, car with two or three people.

"I've always wanted to go to New York and the NIT. I've never been there," Palay said. "Classes are really secondary in this case."

"He said he had a ride scheduled for Thursday, but the driver changed her mind about going. Palay said he took some tests early and it wouldn't have hurt to take the week off from school. He added he had looked forward to beginning his break a week early.

Leo Reid, a freshman in pre-law, had also planned on going to the opening round game but had to change his plans when his ride was canceled.

"Because I live in New York, I was real interested in going," Reid said. "I know most of the players on the team, and they could understand. I was willing to miss a week of classes if I had a ride."

Reid said he is hoping the Salukis will be in the finals so he'll be able to see the team win.

Marion Starr, SIU student from Southern Illinois, is also a fan. She said the Salukis must beat Pittsburgh Saturday in the opening round game if the Salukis should make it to the quarterfinals, they will play Tuesday against the winner of the Clemson-Providence contest. If SIU wins that game, they will play in the semifinals Saturday.

Water testing lab planned for city

By Mary Whiter
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Plans for a new, more efficient laboratory for testing the quality of Carbondale water were announced Friday by Colleen Ozment, central laboratory superintendent.

Ozment said the laboratory should be completed by Nov. 1, 1973.

The laboratory will have approximately 920 square feet and be located on the third floor of the Water Treatment Plant on South Wall Street.

The estimated cost for the new laboratory is $40,001. Renovation, of the third floor will include installation of plumbing, heating, and electrical service.

The purpose of centralizing the laboratory into one location is to combine equipment and manpower into one efficient, organized operation, Ozment said.

She said currently the testing is being done in two small labs, one at the Water Treatment Plant and one at the Sewage Plant on Illinois 13. She said they were "small and overcrowded for the amount of testing we do."

Combining into one facility will also mean that the equipment the city has will be used more efficiently, Ozment said. She said that it will avoid the necessity of duplicating expensive equipment.

Bill Boyd, director of public works, said the renovation of the floor will be done by city employees in order to save money.

The Illinois Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Illinois Department of Public Health, and the Federal EPA regulate the testing and facilities of the Water Treatment Plant.

State EPA rules require that, "Each public water system must have an adequate laboratory equipment and capability to perform the operational tests."

The city has two laboratory technicians and the supervisor, Ozment said.

The new facilities will improve the test quality and will also enable the chemists to perform more tests, Ozment said.

"A few of the other benefits to be derived from the Central Lab concept are experimentation with new techniques to better utilize the laboratory and equipment; development of a laboratory manual for the city quality control checks on chemicals for treatment; thorough organization of laboratory records and reports and more efficient laboratory control of treatment plants," Ozment said.

Police initiate survey of community attitudes

Carbondale Police Chief George Kennedy announced that the police department will begin a survey of community attitudes towards the police department Monday.

Detective Mike Muirzio, who is also a graduate student at SIU, developed the questionnaire. He said surveys of this type have been done in only two other cities in the United States.

The survey will be conducted by SIU students in Social Welfare 383—"Introduction to Interviewing." The students will go door to door and personally interview citizens who are part of a randomly selected sampling.

Kennedy said the survey will identify the police department's strong and weak points: "As police are changed, and a relatively new police chief, it will help me considerably in my planning efforts."

The survey also will measure the amount of contact the citizens have with the police department.

The random sample was selected with the help of the SIU Political Science Department. The results will be computerized. A total of 367 citizens will be surveyed.

City Manager Carroll Fry said the project has been a cooperative one between Carbondale and the University. He said, "Resources are available to us at SIU if we draw on them."

Fry said the results of the survey will be made available to the public when they are in their final form. He said the raw data from the survey will not be released.

The survey asks questions such as: "Do you think the police treat black and white people alike?" and "Do you think the police get along with the public?"

The survey also asks for information concerning how the respondent feels the police have handled the problems of streaking, dogs, traffic, riots, armed robberies, drunken driving, murder and other problems.

Lecturer calls for research money

By Bruce Hackel
Daily Egyptian, Carbondale

The world's energy problems will only be solved if massive amounts of money are poured into research and development, B.E. professor of chemistry at Monmouth College told an audience of about 100 persons Friday.

Speaking on the topic, "Energy and Environment," Jones said this effort could be accomplished if stringent conservation measures are begun to allow enough money to develop research programs to prove fruitful.

Jones brought along a mini-computer (Energy Environment Simulator) to simulate energy conditions of the future.

Jones told the audience of chemistry students that his appearance, as well as that of his classmate, was made possible by a grant from the Energy Research and Development Administration. He said he, along with about 30 other persons and mini-computers, are assigned geographical areas around the country to "make people aware of the problem and see how to invest in technology."

Utilizing various graphs and slides, Jones illustrated his point that "The era of fossil fuels which began 150 years ago is quickly coming to an end."

Jones said liquid petroleum would be totally non-existent in 100 years, and explorations for natural gas are yielding little in terms of new sources of the fuel.

"When you talk about reducing energy consumption, you're talking about lower standards of living, because energy and money are about the same thing," Jones said.

Jones said the American ideal of each generation growing richer than the previous one is "just not going to last."

He said beginning now, people are going to have to develop a different set of goals for living.

"A king never had it so good as we do in this country. True, it's not going to last," Jones quipped.

Students were allowed to program the computer to see how well their predictions would work out projected into the future. Such controls as personal energy reserves, hot-water heat, gasoline automobiles, and electrical energy were manipulated by the SIU students in an attempt to reach a working balance that would "keep us going into the twentieth century."

Jones explained that if society "plays its cards right," the transition from a fossil fuel society to a "current income" society could probably be made.

He said this transition necessitates severe conservation measures as well as tremendous amounts of money devoted to research and development.

"A current income society is one which lives off the energy it produces on the spot and not on projected energy money," Jones said.

He said the computer represents the "best energy information the federal government has to offer." He said he takes the machine practically anywhere he has to appear in Illinois.

"I speak before Rotary Clubs, League of Women Voters groups, and various groups affiliated with educational institutions," Jones said.

Council to hear opinion on marijuana referendum

The Carbondale City Council will hear a legal opinion Monday night from City Attorney John Rogers regarding the legality of placing a referendum for the reform of marijuana laws on the city's general election ballot.

The commission was requested by petition at last week's Town Meeting. The petition, holding 1,306 signatures of voters, was filed in Carbondale, Monday, April, 1973. It enacts an ordinance to prohibit possession, control, use, transfer, or sale of cannabis sativa L., commonly referred to as marijuana to punishable by a fine of not more than $50.00 or not more than 30 grams. (Commonly referred to as one ounce.)

In other action at its formal session, the council will act on a proposal to delay enforcement of the new city sign law.

The proposal was presented by Mayor Neil Eckert at the last informal council session. It calls for a six-month suspension of the present sign ordinance to allow the Chamber of Commerce to prepare a voluntary program to upgrade signs and to allow the city staff to investigate the possibility of writing a more desirable ordinance governing signs.

The council will also hear a petition from Pymatuning Township for installation of a fire hydrant. The board said a sidewalk on a part of the University property would be made to the Community Center of the University City complex, 607 E. College St., for free athletic admission to SIU students that want a reserved seat or wish to order a ticket that is declared unconstitutional a provision in the Illinois Constitution that requires the creation or a special seat or ticket to football games.

While the proposal for free admission was officially presented by Don Weaver, SIU's athletic director, the council would like to give all football fans an opportunity to attend games for free.

"We hope to have a decision before free admission before the end of the semester," Mager said. "In my judgment is an administrative decision. Students that want a reserved seat or special location probably will have to pay for their seats, Mager said."

Free athletic admission may be offered next fall

SIU students may be admitted free to men's intercollegiate athletic events starting next fall, said T. Richard Meyer, vice president for development and services. The proposal for free admission was recently suggested by Don Weaver, SIU's athletic director.

Gazette reporter Brian West said, "It's too bad people will interpret it as tied to a fee increase."

Mager said students that want a reserved seat or special location probably will have to pay for their seats, Mager said. An American classic

An American classic

Henry Fonda will appear at 7 p.m. Monday on WSIU-TV, Channel B, in the "one man play" based on the life of attorney Clarence Darrow. Fonda's portrayal has won critical acclaim in the theatre and on commercial television. Critics Clive Barnes called the performance "an American classic."

Proposals calling for $5 per semester increases in both the athletic and Student Center fees for full-time students were outlined Friday by Vice President for Student Affairs Bruce Swinburne.

The two fee increases were among five proposed changes presented at a gathering of students, faculty and administrators called together by Swinburne and Student Center director Allen Masler. A representative of the Student Center (APSC) favors the fee increase. If approved by the Board of Trustees, the $5 fee increase would become effective fall semester.

Swinburne said that under the proposed elimination of fees for students enrolled at extension and residence centers, and Simcm, members of the Student Center staff were offered for public service courses were presented by Swinburne.

Swinburne indicated that the fee proposals were likely to go before the Board of Trustees April 10 meeting in Carbondale.

Michael Gibbons, a senior majoring in design, spoke in favor of having the academic fee paid on an equal basis with students. "I think the athletic program would be a great place to start," he said. "Let's hold the athletic fee for himself and the other sources," Masler added.

Swinburne said acceptable alternatives in response to Masler.

"John Simcm, who led the charge for acceptable alternatives in response to Masler.

"I don't know what the decisions of the Board of Trustees will be, but I'm sure the decisions will not be made without weighing the student position," said.

Shades of Gray

The University's decision to hire former Chancellor J. Kenneth puppet as a consultant has been made a classic boondoggle. SIU's agreement to pay Gray $10,000 a year, while he sits comfortably 1,200 miles away in Washington, D.C. with his eyes and ears open and collecting other monies from his professional consulting firm, smacks of buying influence. Gray will not be SIU's personal lobbyist, but will merely be selling us his services, whatever they are.

Gray, who owes his political success in toto to the people of Southern Illinois, is being hired to report to SIU President Warren W. Brandt on events in Washington that might interest SIU. However, we already have a representative in Washington, Congressman Paul Simon, who gets paid over $42,000 a year to represent the 24th district, of which we are a part. We also have contacts in the Capitol that in form us of available projects and money, as evidenced by the possibility of SIU-C getting a fire academy built with federal funds. We discovered that potential bonanza without the help of Kenneth Gray.

It is true, no doubt, that Simon cannot devote his full time to SIU-C. But, neither can Gray. Gray operates a full-time consulting firm which takes up most of his time. And, let us not forget that he quit Congress after 20 years for reasons of poor health.

The argument that SIU cannot afford to hire Gray was never put in terms that the average man (or woman) who reads this newspaper can understand. The point is one of principle, an element that seems to be in short supply these days. We have no doubt that the influence among the bureaucrats in the nation's capital. If Gray is so concerned with the good of SIU, let him donate his services. That would be a small price to pay in light of the benefits he has derived from this area and the amount of energy and time he would spend on SIU's welfare.

Hiring Gray is asinine, especially in light of his current problems with the IRS. Gray, who has said he has $100,000 in the bank as a war-surplus, sold a helicopter bought for him through campaign funds and allegedly misused the capital. While this appears to be an ad hominem argument, the fact remains that Gray's dealings are presumed to be less than widely open. Hiring him as a "consultant" is demeaning to the University. Let Gray make his fortune from his consulting firm and collect his large government pension. But he is out of office and we don't need to pay him to work for us anymore.

Wrong Direction

Recently appointed U.S. Attorney General Edward Levi announced his support for restablishing the death penalty in the United States. The only thing involved are: hijacking, rape, killing a policeman and multiple or repeated murder. I think Levi has a sound argument, except for one minor omission.

Crimes of the magnitude of murder and hijacking are not committed by the average American-gone astray. These are violent acts of disturbed people. A man (or woman) who believes that he can possibly get away with a premeditated crime such as hijacking is at the very least suffering from delusions of grandeur. A man (or woman) who commits murder, whether premeditated or in a fit of passion, can hardly be said to be functioning under full rational capacity.

People who commit crimes are ill. If we choose to deal with these people through capital punishment, then we should also consider what to do with those two or three million people who are functionally and rationally decreed that a human being should die. Following the argument for the death penalty to its logical conclusion, we find ourselves with twice more trials to be conducted.

Obviously, this would cause judges to consider carefully before sentencing a fellow man to death. It would also put the death penalty in proper perspective.

We have struggled valiantly to develop some means to deal with crime. To punish the death penalty for any crime would be a giant step backwards.

Small town publisher can tackle the big boys

By Dave Ibata

The newspaper publisher finished his coffee and leaned back on his throne, a leather swivel-chair wedged between two desks in the reception room of Pinckneyville's Democrat. Typewriting machines cluttered in the next room. "It's a general rule that the staff just doesn't call me boss," said John Shley, publisher, editor-in-chief, sports writer, advertising man and press man of the 2,600 circulation weekly. He put aside his Syrofoam cup and reached for a corndog pipe. "They just call me John."

Shley summarized the Democrat's format: It's more of a community paper. I pick up the broken arms and mumps that don't get into the daily papers. It's just a honey paper — it's my personality reflected in the paper.

Otten Shley provides space to the 3,400-person hamlet 30 miles northwest of Carbondale. The finished product of the Democrat's 11-person staff had rolled off the press the night before, and while Shley talked, postmen stuffed the 10-page paper into slots and mailboxes throughout Perry County.

Shley said he considers life on a small-town newspaper "very stimulating and very interesting." He has lived in Pinckneyville since the mid-1920s, and purchased in 1953 the Democrat from his father. Shley has worked with Synergy and the Criss Intervention Service in Carbondale, and now serves as a professional member of the Daily Egyptian Policy and Review Board.

Desktops, bookcases, trophies, plaques, files and an old Underwood typewriter fight for space in Shley's office. A coat-of-arms and nature and science-fiction posters embellish the office wall.

A secretary shelled coffee and donuts into the office, while Shley's eldest son took orders for private printing jobs.

Economic pressures have forced the Democrat, Inc., to undertake as many as 30 jobs at a time, Shley explained. "I really feel harassed by that, because I'd like to go out and do feature stories. I think this is a common situation for weeklies. Commerical printing is the frosting on the cake."

Shley starts his days at 6 a.m. He fires bartells and puts in his time, "I start the day feeling good," he said. "I'll be in August, and I feel better now than I ever have." Monday and Tuesday Shley picks up advertising copy and assists in the press room. Wednesday he cranks up the Democrat's old press and oversees bundling and mailing of the newspaper.

Friday and Saturday he puts the auxiliary press to work on letter heads and forms. "It's walk-in work," he said. "Ready customers are happy with what we give them."

Saturday evenings Shley attends church services. Sunday morning he returns to the office to catch up on desk work.

People submit problems to the newspaper, he said. "It's a nice feeling to know that people trust you," he said. He commented wryly, "In a small community like this, there's a lot of politics, backscratching and butt-kicking going on."

The March 12 issue contained Shley's "Open Letter to President Ford," a sampling of the publisher's philosophy.

"Do we really want Democracy as they see it of recent; a nation whose vice-president took bribes, a former president who is a living lie, in total. Democracy is a beautiful vehicle, but if you turn a bunch of jerks lose on it..." He shook his head and sipped his coffee.

Shley writes nearly all the copy in the Democrat. His opinions pop up throughout the newspaper. nestled beside birthday wishes under the "Around Pinckneyville" column on the front page, small bars like an inlay in a delicate and unjust laws sprout like burrs in a field of clover.

"Congressmen aren't looking at what laws they pass at all," the Democrat editor states. "They look at the law they can fight, the way the blood," Shley said. "Wrinkles about his lips and brow tightened into a frown. "I used to think it was futile. Now I believe that maybe I'm failing — but I'm still trying."
Bias is inevitable

To the Daily Egyptian:

From experience as a college newspaper editor and from conversations with reporters and news analysts, I found that journalism bias is inevitable. In fact, I much prefer the answer, "so what?" from the press when confronted with the charges of bias than the absolute denial: "Altschuler's claims of press monopolization are totally unfounded, and, undoubtedly based solely on personal prejudice." (Daily Egyptian, today, March 19, page 2). Totally unfounded and based solely on personal prejudice? Is the student writer (Daily Egyptian News Editor, Carla Flowers) implying that the press is not locally monopolized, that journalists never take sides on issues and candidates; that every editor and reporter relates news just as it happened? The student writer's editorial, it seems to me, is not one that comes from a hard-nosed, objective journalist; but from—a bit—a mind reader.

Criticism of press coverage is quite easy. And everyone should do it. All one has to do is be at the event (covered or not covered) and compare them with the printed stories. I am sure Dr. Milton Altschuler's proximity to the candidate provides a sound basis for his evaluations.

Letters

Much of what people learn about candidates they get second-hand, from newspapers, etc. If Irene Altschuler is defeated April 15 in her contest for Carbondale mayor (the test of her worth as a candidate, according to the blame would not necessarily be hers.

Disband murderous Klan

To the Daily Egyptian:

The K.K.K. means only one thing to me: white robes murderers and terrorists, an organization which is repugnant to the ideals of American democracy and freedom. Apparently, the K.K.K. realizes that this is precisely the image that they represent to most decent people. So what do they do? Misunderstood? Grand Dragon do? He initiates a public relations campaign, as John E. Rodgers, president of the Florida Branch of the Klan has done. Mr. Rodgers aims to dispel "myths" and "misconceptions" about the Klan. To this I can only say that I don't believe that the Klan could possibly be any more vile than my current perceptions would lead me to believe.

Yet, Mr. Rodgers would have us believe that his branch of the Klan is not the radicalization organization most people think it is. He would like to have us believe that the Klan (and not the idea of the Klan) "ought to be destroyed." But what do we gain? What do we lose? What does a war mean? I don't believe that the Klan would possibly be any more vile than my current perceptions would lead me to believe.

Driving Dan's philosophy

To the Daily Egyptian:

In all his economy stimulating proposals, Governor Walker seems to have lost his energy conscious "Walkin' Home" policy and replaced it with a new "Driving Dan" philosophy. New bridges, road and airport renovations are all I see on the latest give away list.

These projects (and many others) are the result of a mandate that we continue to pollut our environment and deplete our renewable resources at an ever increasing rate.

But where can an energy conscious, self propelled person live in this environment? If one lives close to one's daily destination, he can walk. If one lives further away and in the Carbondale area, he can ride a bicycle. Terrific Idea! However, there is one hassle, if you infringe on the automobile territory, you're likely to be off the road. Okay, Dan, now is the time to add a new category to your list, "Bike Paths".

Educational Council sets meeting

By Wendy Kearns
Student Writer

Cliff Callahan, executive director of the Southern Illinois Community Arts Program, will give a short presentation at the first quarterly board meeting of the Educational Council of 100, Inc. Thursday at 3 p.m. at the board meeting, to be held in the Dean’s Conference Room, Wham 11B, the council will decide if it wants to lend support to the Community Arts Program, which is interested in community-school relations, to assist in community-school needs assessments and field studies, she said.

A new chairman for the Awards Committee for 1976 to replace Olive Whitington will be selected at the meeting, said Duff.

The board will also elect a new treasurer at the meeting to replace Marion Webb who has resigned due to other obligations and duties, she said.

Whitting, president of the board, will preside over the meeting, Duff said.

Money offered for logo design

A $100 prize will be awarded in April to the best student designer of a logo for the Midwest Division of the Academy of Management.

The academy is a national professional organization of university professors who meet annually to read papers, exchange ideas and maintain professional contacts.

The Midwest Division is one of five regional divisions that form the Academy of Management.

Students should submit a one color logo design on regular white 8½ by 11 inch stock paper to Professor J.G. Hunt, Department of Administrative Sciences.

The deadline for entries is April 1. Those submitted will be screened by a panel of judges and the top five from SIU will be sent on to the annual Midwest Academy meeting in April, where a final selection will be made.

Beg your pardon

The Daily Egyptian incorrectly reported Friday that Mike Jenkins, newly appointed student government elections commissioner and his assistant, Bob Lechten, are sophomores in pre-law. They are second-year students in the School of Law. We apologize for any confusion this may have caused.

The Greater Carbondale Area Commerce of Commerce is planning to sponsor a "Friendship Festival," tentatively set for June 13 and 14.

Ed Rosen, chairman of the Carbondale Friendship Festival, announced in the chamber's monthly newsletter that preparations for the festival are "in target" for the June date.

Among the events and activities to be included in the festival are the Navy's Blue Angels, a Midwest Horse Show, a square dance event, Flag Day parade, talent parade, a petting zoo at the University Mall, and a show of local wines.

Rosen said several other attractions are "in the hopper."
Saluki look to get by first wave at NIT

By Ron Sutton
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

NEW YORK—Get past the first wave, and the Salukis can handle it. That’s Saluki’s game plan—not tournament plan—as they head into their National Invitational Tournament opener Saturday.

The first game is at 7 p.m., here, 6 p.m. Carbondale time, as the first part of the nighttime double header. A win would put the Salukis in the March 30-Saturday’s nightcap final round against the winner of the Clemson-Providence first-round after Clemson, favored in that game, is considered by the top teams in the field, making the second round a tough one for the Salukis.

First, they must whip the Pittsburgh Panthers, and, to do so, Saluki mentor Paul Lambert’s plans call for getting into the secondary, as a football coach would say. “They pressure a lot, so we hope to get the ball down the floor before they can,” Lambert said Friday. “We have a hard team workout. “If we can, we can get the start.”

“Then try to take your game by changing your defensive com- “We try to take your game by changing your defensive com- “We try to take your game by changing your defensive com- bination,”’ said, “but we hope to score off of secondary fast breaks. We can’t let them get their guards and go right into our offense against their big men without hesitating.”

To do so looks as a more likely possibility than it did earlier in the week, with point guard Perry Lambert has not been so fortunate.

“Hines is in good shape—he’s worked hard and has lost five or six pounds,” Lambert said, “but Tim won’t play. At least, it’s very unlikely.”

Room for his place will be on the road, sophomore Mel Hughes. Hughes, at 6-foot-4, 225 pounds, strengthens the team’s inside game. “Their wattaking,” Lambert said Friday. The Salukis are not as vulnerable compared to the 6-4 Rice.

“With less than a point lead going into all the important options Friday night, we need to ask if the slim lead means much.

“The options are like another new rule,” said Lambert. “We’re glad to have that lead, but you have to keep doing your job—keep the pressure up.”

“I can feel Roger (Council) breathing heavy on my neck,” Lambert added with a laugh.

Two Saluki basketballers named honorable mention

Saluki center Joe C. Merriweather and guard Mike Glenn were among the players honored Friday. He was named honorable mention All-America by the Cleveland Independent Press. His total of 53.90, he said confidently. “Just have to keep our heads and systematically go through our routines. The big thing is to establish a high score. Even if we don’t win the meet we can still qualify for the finals by scoring enough points.

Two teams competed Friday night. Individual qualifications get underway starting at 2 p.m. Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for students.
