Astronaut Gordon Cooper landed safely in his spacecraft Faith 7 at 6:23 p.m. last night 80 miles southeast of Midway Island, after what was described as the best flight yet.

Cooper completed his 22nd orbit east of Shanghai at 6:02 p.m. where he manually fired the reverse rockets for his re-entry into the earth's atmosphere. At 6:23 p.m. his spacecraft landed in the water, 7000 yards off the port bow of the U.S. Navy recovery ship Kearsarge, closer to the ship than any former space landing.

The only news arriving occurred during the 19th orbit when Cooper noticed that a SIU Gets $350,000 For Equipment

Governor Otto Kerner released $350,000 to purchase movable equipment for new construction at Southern.

The funds come from an emergency appropriation voted by the General Assembly.

Paul Isbell director of business affairs, said most of the money will be used to purchase the new College of Education Building, scheduled to be occupied immediately after conclusion of the remainder for the Morris Library addition under construction.

Isbell said $250,000 is earmarked for the Communications Building.

The remainder will be used for the library addition and an initial start on equipping the Communications Building.

The buildings are being constructed with State University Bond Issue funds. Isbell said, "the bond issue does not provide for movable equipment, Isbell said.

Honors Students Told:

"Our time is the age of complex problems," Willbur Moulton told an Honors Day Assembly audience last night. "And one of the high purposes of honors programs must be to prepare young people to cope with these problems."

"Society cannot afford less than the best from every member," Moulton said, particularly from those whose talent sends them apart. "Imperfect as they may be, I am convinced that our honors programs, in all their various forms, are one of our great assets in these challenging times," he asserted.

"In pre-Sputnik days few colleges had honors programs, and most of those existed only on the pages of the catalog," Moulton said. "Today honors have become almost a status symbol, the mark of enlightened academic policy."

At another point in his speech, Moulton commented, "I suppose the fact that we far more frequently give public recognition to excellence in masculine strength or feminine beauty is not that these attributes are considered more important, only more visible. Academic excellence cannot be judged by parading students one by one across a platform."

Moulton spoke out for a close relationship between students and faculty in the educational process. "One of the

'Very Impressive':

Globe-Trotting Granny

Likes Morris Library

By Alan Goldfarb

As Lillian M. Gilbreth emerged from the parked car, she strained to look around at the surroundings, and with a low, cracked voice she claimed, "You have one of the most interesting libraries in the nation!"

And Mrs. Gilbreth, one of the world's most renowned women engineers, has seen a lot of libraries, countries, and just about everything. "It is to see, in all of her 85 years."

Mrs. Gilbreth was a guest speaker at a School of Business sponsored lecture yesterday afternoon, and had just revisited some of the old spots on the SIU campus she had been to just three short years ago.

"Things are a lot different now than they were three years ago," she said with great enthusiasm. "The library is impres sive, with its new addition, it is going to be very impressive. The facilities are excellent."

Mrs. Gilbreth, who has no formal training in the field of industrial engineering, considers herself sort of like a pinch-hitter, and likes to tell "The people in the next place I go to, at least the people who I've been."

She has probably done a lot of "selling" because she's around the world twice, and her age won't stop her from getting along the long journey once again.

Referring back to Morris Library, and typical of an engineer, she wondered, "I hope the foundation is strong enough to accommodate the new addition."

As to her engineering career, she didn't think that it was too unusual or difficult for a woman to be in the field.

"I knew a man who had a nursery school and many men are in occupations that are normally populated by women. "How about dress designers?" she asked with a smile that wrinkled her age-worn face.

Mrs. Gilbreth, whose husband persuaded her to go into the same field he was in over 40 years ago, is now of the leading members of the Society of Women Engineers.

"I hope you will have a branch here on campus soon,"

Student Habits

Study Deadline Is Extended

Authors of the activities participation study questions are now being completed by SIU students, say there is a possible 3,840 combinations for fact and preference finding.

Not that the Activities Development Center is particularly interested in finding that may determine answers for each questionnaire, they say.

The co-operative effort is designed to locate the main lines of interests relating to age, sex, high school background, scholastic major and place of residence with extra-curricular interests.

The deadline for returning the unsigned questionnaires has been extended to May 30.

Hundreds of them have been taken out by living area groups and filled out in meetings. Many other students are picking them up at the Information Desk and filling them out individually.

Plans for the monumental task of categorization are being deferred until the questionnaire is all in. The goal is to get one back from each student on campus.

Advertising Agency Day

To Be Observed Monday

Three representatives from the Chicago office of J. Walter Thompson, advertising agency, will be on campus Monday to take part in the annual Advertising Agency Day program.

They are Gilbert Palen, director of research; Donald Mint, copy group head for printed media; and Tom DeMint, copy group head for television.

The program will begin at 7:30 a.m. on the campus, with a presentation in the Agriculture Seminar Room on the regular Jobs in Journalism series.

There will be an informal coffee hour at 11 a.m. in the same room at which students interested in advertising will be invited to ask questions and talk informally with the men from the agency.

The agency representatives will be guests at a luncheon at noon in the River Room.

For many students of Spain's history, the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella remains the turning point of the world. In the original three-volume history of the reign, published in 1837, Prescott states that the reign was "an event so important as to require attention itself; a balance of the power of the nations in Europe and the New World; and the establishment of Spanish dominion over the American continent." It is a monumental work, spanning over a hundred years and containing over twelve volumes. However, the original work is not available in its entirety in the United States, and the three-volume history of the reign is not generally available. The new, three-volume history of the reign is not only a valuable resource for scholars, but also a welcome addition to the general public's understanding of this important period in history.

What caused the downfall of the once-powerful Cortes? Gardner does not tell us, but Prescott does.

Gardner tends to minimize Prescott's rather serious reservations about the loneliness of the Basis of the achievement. Even a cursory glance at the abridged version does not provide a clear statement of what Prescott felt was the basic weakness of the Cortes.

Prescott's conclusion that it was "the glory and clergymen to support the common people in the Cortes, which is nothing but a piece of political and deliberation." There is mention of royal influence in elections, and fear and feuds among the nobility, but the clarity of Prescott's statement has been lost.

Recognizing the fact that the definition of political and institutional structures and the form of economic policies are among the factors that are of significant subjects for study by modern historians, Prescott has attempted to gain his basic objective simply by "heavier concentration of political and military action than of social action in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella." By using this technique, Gardner believes that it is possible to transform a 120-year-old work into a product of the current historical technique. The definitive work on the subject remains, and that bell remains to be written. Until it is produced, this one-volume edition of Prescott's work will serve as a useful and convenient guide for the general reader.

Reviewed by Dan P. Silverman, Department Of History

Gardner has attempted to achieve two contradictory goals; he wishes to retain the essential Prescott, while at the same time giving the book the appearance of scientific, objective scholarship. According to Gardner, "the abridgement derives from an attempt to satisfy demands for a scholarly book and a lively concern for the modern reader...this abridgement is pure possible."

Prescott was, to a great degree, an American scholar, but he also had strong opinions about certain subjects, such as the Mexican Inquisition. It is in the outspoken voicing of these opinions that one finds the "pure Prescott," but Gardner has attempted to avoid expressing his opinions and presumably to give the work more "balance" in the form of a whole piece of modern scholarship.

Prescott termed the Spanish book "far the best that has been done" and "the most damnable and greatest abuses that ever disgraced humanity." In a plea for toleration, Prescott wrote, "In the present liberal state of knowledge, we look with delight on the gradation of the pretensions of any human being, however exalted, into the sacred rights of conscience, intemperately possessed by every man. We feel that the spirit of concords among the individual may be safely left to itself." This may not be modern objective historical prose, but it is surprising to think that these words, which ought to have so much meaning for a generation which has lived through the Nazi regime, Soviet Communism, and McCarthyism, should have been deleted by an editor and reinserted into Prescott across to the modern reader.

"This is not possible to transform a 120-year-old work into a product of the current historical technique." The definitive work on the subject remains, and that bell remains to be written. Until it is produced, this one-volume edition of Prescott's work will serve as a useful and convenient guide for the general reader.

For several years now, Williams has been an important influence in American poetry, and his reputation of late has grown, especially with those who see his poems as a counterbalance to the studied symbolism of T. S. Eliot. The poems here, as well as those in The Collected Later Poems, also show Williams' use of the three-line stanza and the American idiom with the same metric meter. With these, Williams has demonstrated that sharp, moving poems can be written in common speech.

Spend a great deal of time—do you measure up to these requisites for baseball players?

If you do you might become a major league player, according to Chet Montgomery, who is a scout for the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Montgomery is in his fourth year of scouting for the Pirates and was one of several scouts in attendance at a recent SIU game.

"Size, speed and an ability to throw the ball well are the three things which we look for in every player," Montgomery said. "Hitting is important but not the most important because we figure we can develop hitters, but if a boy doesn’t have them or speed he might as well forget a pro career."

He talked about the possibilities of SIU players making the major leagues someday.

"There are several boys who I feel might play pro, but they have to pass the requisites for the major leagues," Montgomery said softly to avoid the other scouts overhearing the names.

"Mike Pratte, catcher, could play pro ball if he puts on some weight and grows some," the scout said. "Right now he is too small to be a big league catcher. But he moves real well behind the plate and knows how to handle the pitchers."

"In fact, I would say without a doubt that Pratte is the best receiver which I have seen in my six-state area," he added.

Montgomery covers Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado and southern Illinois for the Pirates. "Ed Walter is another Southern ball player who some day might make the major leagues," Montgomery said moving behind the screen to see Walter’s throw.

"He has a real good fast ball and good control," he said. "The only thing he lacks is control of his curve ball."

"He has a good curve ball but has difficulty controlling the ball," Montgomery continued. "But for a freshman he is the best prospect I have seen, All the other pitchers which I have seen are upper classmen."

Montgomery has watched the Salukis play three games this year and Walter has pitched two of the three winning one and losing one.

Montgomery resides in Henderson, Ky, but is hardly ever home.

"I’m on the road usually five of the seven days during the spring and summer," he commented. "But during the winter months I am able to spend a great deal of time with my family."
