Expansion jobs spur school board debate

By Laura Coleman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

One person was fired and another rehired by the Carbondale Community High School Board of Education Thursday night, but not before the action's ramifications on the district's financial situation were discussed.

Catherine Halleran, a clerk in the Learning Resources Center, was fired because the board eliminated her position. Halleran has been with the board on a monthly basis for the past two months and was recommended by her supervisor, Martha Harmon, to be continued in the job.

Halleran's last day of work was Thursday.

Howard Kravitz was rehired for the rest of the academic year as athletic trainer. He will be paid $1,800.

Both positions caused discussion by board members concerning the positions' necessity.

Board member Roy Weshinsky, who voted against both hires, said, "We've been talking money lots of the time lately, and I'm wondering whether we ought to be careful. It's an expansion position at a time when I thought we were talking economy."

An expansion position one that does not appear in the district's budget, board member Mary Walker said.

Walker said Friday she is "very distressed" at the method of firing Halleran, whom Walker described as extremely qualified for the job.

She said the firing of Halleran and rehiring of Kravitz may appear to be an inconsistency by the board, because Kravitz' job is also an expansion position, but she said a difference exists in the availability of persons to occupy the two positions.

"It's the (clerk) position, not a job that someone else couldn't be trained to do," she said. Walker explained that Kravitz' ability is unusually good, and that it's important for athletic injuries to receive immediate attention.

Kravitz will be paid $900 for working with the basketball team and $500 for working with spring sports teams. "I think we're very fortunate to get him," Walker said. "Kravitz is a steal for us."

When the matter of the football trainer came up, the board was told by Athletic Director Reid Martin that the football team needs Kravitz.

Weshinsky questioned the hiring. He said it is discriminatory to hire a trainer for the athletics program but not to have one available if a physical education or dancing student gets hurt.

Kravitz told the board he would put in 'the necessary time' for other activities for which a trainer may be needed.

The board discussed the possibility of the school's making money from CCHS acting as host for the football playoff game as a method of offsetting the cost of hiring Kravitz.

Weshinsky further questioned the priority of allocating money for the trainer. "There are so many extra-curricular activities for which we don't have in this school that I think we need," he said.

In a related discussion, Weshinsky issued a statement asking the district's three building principals to evaluate all extracurricular activities.

The purpose of the evaluation, he said, is to examine the role of the activity in the educational process, the role of the spectators in the activity and the amount of time and money that should be spending for the activity.

All students employed half-time or more by any Illinois university or other state educational institution may be eligible for free state health insurance, following a Champaign County Circuit Court order.

The ruling, handed down Sept. 30, was made against the director of the Department of Personnel of Illinois, Nolan B. Jones, who had denied to state employees the benefits and provisions of the State Employees Group Insurance Act of 1971 on the sole basis of their being students at the University of Illinois.

The judge's order was entered after the court had ruled that Jones, failed to appear in court Aug. 20, and a default was entered against him.

The Students Union of the University of Illinois, the plaintiff, said in a press release the ruling applies to all half-time student employees throughout the state, even though the action was initiated on behalf of students on the Urbana campus.

"I really can't comment of it because I had not heard of it until now," Dick Higgerson, SIU legal counsel, said Friday.

SIU has no category of workers called "half-time" employees, but a full-time employee is one who is expected to work 40 hours per week excluding holidays.

There are implications from the order which would apply to many student workers who work 20 hours per week.
Center director role in programs unsettled

By Ray Urevch
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Should the next Student Center director be in charge of programming within the Student Center?

The Student Center director search committee has (as of Monday) spent more than 60 hours of discussion over the last two weeks. Committee is comprised of 12 members representing Student Government, Graduate Student Council, Student Center employees and the administration.

Bruce Johnson, vice president for student affairs and chairman of the committee, said the committee should have final responsibility.

Gov. Jimmy Carter has offered the Student Government Activities Council (SGAC), and Senator Kevin Crowley said the next director should serve only in an advisory capacity to the Student Center Programming Committee and SGAC for programming within the center.

Swinburne said the amount of income generated into the Student Center budget should not be the "driving force" because "the governing board or any governing body should be a "person who would provide the innovative programs.""

Clarence Dougherty, present director of the Student Center who has been mentioned as a possible candidate by SIU President Warren Brandt, said that under his leadership the Student Center director programming responsibility Swinburne "can't hold him accountable for the programming."

Swinburne explained that at the beginning of fall semester about 14,000 students arrived early. As a result immediate decisions had to be made about programming for the Student Center.

He added that the current Student Center director is in a "totally "can do" position" if he has questions about programming, and that some Student Center directors have found it difficult to program if the director assumes a programming function within the center.

Vyse said he is concerned that the director will have the final say about allocation of student money and will have to make "a great deal" of the programming, with the turnover of student representatives on the Student Center Programming Committee.

A proposal by Vyse Tuesday, which would give SGAC fiscal responsibility for Student Center programming with the Student Life Office and would have the Student Center director or his designee work in an advisory capacity with SGAC and Student Center Programming Committee, was deadlocked in a 5-4 vote.

Neither Swinburn nor Dougherty are voting members on the committee.

Swinburn said his proposal was made in an attempt to compromise while opponents said it would not work.

"I don't think it's a "two-headed monster" and was "bad management," Vyse told the committee.

Swinburn told the committee, "I don't think if I have a different authorization to determine Student Center structure, and that should be what the governor is willing to get out of the student role," Vyse said.

"I want it (fiscal responsibility) resolved," he continued "We've waited a long time.

Walker expected to name new trustee by Nov. 1

Gov. Daniel Walker is expected to appoint a new member to the SIU Board of Trustees by Nov. 1, said Lou Vitullo, who was on a "tentative appointment" to boards and commissions for the governor.

The new member will replace William W. Allen, 48, whose term expired January 1.

At least three names will be given to the governor in the near future.

"I don't think we are more than a few weeks away," Vitullo said.

Since his term expired, Allen has declined to say whether he wishes to be reappointed or replaced on the board. He did say he had "some of the mistakes" he said, but that it would be better not to reveal their discussions until the governor makes a decision.

"The governor did not want me to not serve," Allen said. "What is happening with my full knowledge, consent and encouragement," he said.

"I have been told by the governor's office that they are in the 'replacement,'" said Chief of Board Staff James M. Brown.

Although Allen has attended only one board meeting since his term expired, Vitullo said he is considered to be a part of the board. Brown said.

Walker makes appointment, a senate executive committee has to approve governor's decision, said George Cooper, lawyer for the board.

A member of the Illinois Agricultural Society, and is Republican by law must be replaced by a Republican.

Appeals cases to be heard by Judicial Board Oct. 28

The Campus Judicial Board, the first appellate level of the SIU discipline system, will meet at 3 p.m. Oct. 28 in the Student Center Board Room.

Harris said that 16 undergraduate students, 13 graduate students and one faculty member have been participating in weekly orientation sessions to familiarize themselves with the Student Conduct Code.

Harris said that has completed its operating paper as mandated by the conduct code, and is awaiting its approval by Harvey Welde, SIU's assistant to the president for area boards.

Area boards at Thompson Point and East Campus hear cases before they come to the board.

City clerk fills big job—officials to dog tags

By Laura Coleman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

She'll tell City Manager Carroll Fry he's full of beans.

And he'll listen to her.

She's the cleaning brass of the city administration in their places. City Clerk Elisabeth Leighty is keeping up the family history of a former Carbondale resident or issuing a driver's license or swearing in a city official.

She's got a lot to do, but there was more in 1930 when she started working for the city as assistant city clerk.

That's because things were different in Carbondale. City Clerk Leighty was more likely than not to become a council-manager form of government, under which the Illinois county, rural and urban departments that now exist, she said.

In 1903, Elisabeth Leighty was the finance director, the code enforcement director, the planning director, the purchasing agent, the town's attorney, and the secretary to the current bureaucratic titles that now exist in the city administration.

Not only is she the first female, but to say she is a mere clerk is a grievous under-statement.

"I guess I'm sort of a clearinghouse," she said. "When people are new in town, I'm the city clerk. It's a common office in every town. We're a real part of the community, and federal and state agencies they say.

The Carbondale City Council recently passed a resolution commending Leighty's diligence in following up on a letter requesting the history of a family which formerly lived in the Carbondale area. Leighty supplied the person with a detailed account, including various burial plots of the family.

"I get an awful lot of letters like that," she said. "Sometimes I can help them and sometimes I just can't."

"I usually find something for them, after all, that's part of our history," she explained, adding, "When I look up something I may find something about the history of Carbondale that I didn't know before."

Raised in Randolph County, Leighty traveled around the country before she started her job with the city. She's been described by Fry as "probably the most qualified city clerk around." She attended the Benton School of Law and Brown's Business College in St. Louis, and worked for a degree in English from Lindenwood College in St. Louis.

She has completed course work for a master's degree in English from SIU and taught English to freshmen and sophomores at Sparta High School after she graduated from Lindenwood. She indicated no desire to return to teaching, saying "(teaching is so different now.)"

The average person walking into her first floor city hall office might think he would have to fill out a mountain of forms to conduct whatever business they have in Leighty's office.

Instead, he's likely to be greeted by either Leighty or her assistant, Margarette Boyd, who will answer questions without having to look up the answers, simply because they've been there so long and know the job so well.

Volunteers teach English to refugees

By Mary E. Gardner
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

After being transported halfway around the world, about 25 Vietnamese refugees in the Carbondale area are learning English and getting training for a more important step toward entering American society. They're learning English for the most part.

Two classes meet every Monday through Thursday night, one for beginners and one for the advanced. The classes are taught by volunteer instructors and have been meeting for about a month.

Some of the intricacies of the English language are taught in the course, but that's not for granted are especially difficult for the Vietnamese to grasp, Pharis said. The students are learning, of course, very different from Vietnamese.

Some of the basic sounds of English just don't exist in Vietnamese. One little boy in the beginning class pointed to his thumb and said that that word was particularly hard for him to say.

Words which apparently cause the most difficulties for the advanced group were "th," "ed," "r," "v," "s." and plural of the construction for a "we five.

A pronunciation drill in the advanced group showed students the difference between "left" and "laughed," which is nearly indistinguishable for Vietnamese.

One student in the advanced group, Dang Tran Dang, who came to the States from South Vietnam, had problem with pronunciation stems from having had a Vietnamese teacher for English. "In Vietnam, we rarely learn to speak a language. We only learn to read," he said. He was taught to speak English by one of his Vietnamese instructors, and now he's trying to sound like the accent now is a real problem.

The students are also learning to write English, but "we feel that the classes are really for the Vietnamese," Pharis said. "There is no arm twisting. You put in the work or you don't learn.

The seemingly endless repeating of words and phrases is one of the characteristics of the beginning class.

And there's a new vocabulary too. The beginning class became acquainted with the words "laugh" and "qualify" on Thursday.

Learning the phrase "would rather" in the advanced group soon brought up the problem of learning the difference between proper and common English. Manning pointed out that "I would" often turns into "I'd" on the street.

The students also learn some history and geography in the classes. Repeating sentences about "being a river" turn into learning that the Mississippi River is the longest river in the United States.

The program was started by the Vietnamese Students Association and developed into classes two weeks after ESL was approached with the idea, said Pharis.

"There is obviously a need in Carbondale," said Pharis. "We have Vietnamese students and we feel that ESL would help other nationalities also," said Pharis. But because the program was initiated by the Vietnamese Students Association it was kept exclusively for Vietnamese refugees, he said.

The program is open to any Vietnamese person who wishes to enter. Pharis said. There is no red tape involved in joining the classes; one only needs to go. Pharis said.

The students ages range from about 13 to 30, Pharis said. Instructors for the program are all volunteers, said Pharis. "We had more people volunteering than we had classes to teach," he said. "There was no arm twisting.

Persons wishing to join the classes are given a test to determine which group they should be in, Pharis said. At the end of the semester students in the beginning group will be given a test to determine whether they should be moved into the advanced group, said Pharis.

At the end of the semester students in the beginning group will be given a test to determine whether they should be moved into the advanced group, said Pharis.

Two of the students are Vietnamese. Tho Tran, graduate student in education, and Jack Essig, teaching assistant at CESL, and William Steely, un- dergraduate in English in a foreign language and linguistics.

Ambulance crews get work limit

By Ray Urchel
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

An agreement has been reached between SIU ambulance attendants, the officials representing the Student and Financial Assistance and Health Service officials limiting the number of hours per week the ambulance personnel will be allowed to work, said Elzey Blower, administrative director of the SIU Health Service, said Friday.

The new work restrictions will place a work limit of 30 hours per week on emergency medical technician (EMT) personnel. The work limit for the EMT's will not go into effect until the fall semester, Blower said.

The new work restrictions will replace a work limit of 30 hours per week on emergency medical technician (EMT) personnel without getting special approval from the Student Work Office. The current work limit is 30 hours per week for the EMT's without being reviewed by the Student Work Office. The new work limit will place a work limit of 30 hours per week on EMT personnel, said Blower.

McVay proposed in September that the ambulance personnel be required to work 28 hours per week in the winter and an additional 12 hour shift on the weekend in the spring and summer.

This proposal was opposed by some of the EMT's who claimed that 12-hour shifts, which would change at noon and midnight, would cause class scheduling problems. Thirteen of 18 ambulance personnel who attended an intercrew meeting Oct. 5 said they should be allowed to work their shift limits and their class schedules with the proposed 12-hour work week.

Elzey Blower, ambulance supervisor for the Health Service, said Friday that no changes will be made in the work week.

The work limit will give the ambulance personnel more flexibility in emergency situations, Adams said. He explained that Student Work and Financial Assistance has frequently had to give its approval to more hours than the maximum.

Two student EMT's, representing most of the ambulance staff, indicated satisfaction with the resolution of the scheduling problem.

Adams said, however, that a $150 per semester stipend that the ambulance personnel were paid because of the increased training and responsibility required for their jobs, will not be continued.

The stipend, which was begun in 1972 by the student work office, was declared illegal by the SIU Institutional Accounting Office during an audit in the summer.

"We were (told) to cease and desist, which we did," Adams said. "There is no way it (the stipend) can be made up," Adams said.

Iceland fights to save cod, haddock crop

By Michael Hansen
Student Writer

Twelve years ago the tiny island of Iceland declared war on the fishing fleets of Great Britain and West Germany. They won that war, but today they are on the verge of another. The circumstances prompting such action are the same as those of 15 years ago. This time the world will watch to see if Iceland can stand up to those who try to write its future by controlling its fishing grounds. The British and West German fleets of foreign nations, and save the shrinking crop of cod and haddock that represents the mainstay of its economy.

In 1958 the new leftist government of Iceland decreed that the national fishing boundary would be extended from four to twelve nautical miles. The reason was that British and West German fishing trawlers were increasingly depleting the stocks of cod and haddock, Iceland's biggest export product. Iceland exported $13 million worth of fish products in 1970, more than the total fisheries exports of the United States.

After a series of hostilities between Icelandic gunboats and British trawlers, the situation was resolved when Britain acknowledged the territorial waters again, this time to an unbelievable 200 nautical miles. This is water that has for centuries been considered the "high seas." The reason for doing this is as simple as it was twelve years ago. Foreign fishing fleets are still depleting fish stock, now with a 100 per cent greater effort than twenty years ago. The Icelanders add that the invading fishing fleets are taking great quantities of immature fish and further endangering the replacement of stock.

Iceland has again announced that it will ignore any contrary ruling by the International Court of Justice. Again she intends to enforce the regulation by whatever means she deems necessary. Such determination will be difficult to quell should foreign fleets attempt to invade the territorial waters.

In the International Conference on the Law of the Sea, which is not due to convene until next year, the very busy and do nothing serious to protect the well-being of all the countries of the world that have a stake in the oceans and seas. When a country of 210,000 people like Iceland has to resort to outright military force, small as it may be, to save itself from the ravages of giant nations, then they, and others like her had better dig in for the duration.

They did it before and succeeded, but unless some inter-state and concerned international decisions are made, Iceland could well return from the sea with empty nets, empty stomachs, and an empty future.

Bread recipe reported inaccurately

To the Daily Egyptian:

The article containing my recipe for bread was slightly in error. For anyone interested in the correct recipe for this really great bread, here it is:

one-third cup molasses
one-half cup brown sugar
2 eggs
1 cup flour
2 cups lukewarm water
1 cup milk
one-third cup sugar
one-eighth cup salt
one-fourth cup cooking oil

Place milk and sugar in a mixing bowl. Stir in boiling water and let cool to lukewarm (about 10 minutes). Combine molasses and brown sugar. Cream this mixture in a mixing bowl. Beat the eggs. Stir in the flour and add to sugar mixture. Beat until smooth. Pour the milk mixture into the sugar mixture. Stir to blend. Cover and let rise until double. Pour into a greased loaf pan and bake at 375 degrees for approximately 45 minutes or until the bread sounds hollow when knocked on the bottom. This recipe is very tasty bread.

Condemn Spain

By Chris Bockak
Student Writer

The United States will soon be concluding negotiations with Spain for the sale of U.S. military bases there. Part of the agreement includes $726 million of military equipment to be shipped to Spain. Can we afford to introduce support for any cooperation that may hurt our prestige in Europe? At the beginning of this decade five citizens sentenced to death five terrorists for killing two policemen. These five men were tried by what is rapidly becoming military "kangaroo courts." Spain has made it mandatory for military judges to order the death sentence in cases involving killings of policemen, soldiers, and government officials.

As part of the change-over of power from Franco to Prince Juan Carlos, Premier Arias Navarro started an introduction of some political parties that would ease the country to democracy. In all cases Franco has squashed them. Two incidents seem to point to Franco's Spain is destined to remain the same dictatorship that it has been for 39 years.

The European reaction to the execution of the five was pronounced. Nearly every country in Western Europe issued some criticism of Franco for his move. This sort of reaction should make Washington take notice of the lessors of other members of NATO. The U.S. only issued a statement that both the terrorists and the death sentence are correct.

The only reason that Washington issued no condemnation statement was because it had already been condemned. They are, according to the State Department, "irreplaceable" bases. This is due to continued American presence in the Mediterranean.

The United States can't afford to deal with any further with this sort of country. Our prestige in Europe has not increased that much to be able to flaunt Franco in front of the other NATO nations. If anything happens to Spain, the United States should exert pressure on Spain to stop the political oppression in that country.

Feminists not ‘masculine females’

To the Daily Egyptian:

Male based commentary (Oct. 8) suggests that the majority of feminists believe in the "goodness" or desirability of those traits that are considered "masculine." Leading feminists Germaine Greer and Kate Millett have expressed that if women take on all that is considered male as solutions to our problems, then we are all in trouble.

The retired teacher serves as narrator for the play. In this role, Dawson lacks the emotional involvement that could bring the character to life. Part of the reason is within the character itself. The retired teacher is an idealist who embodies everything good in teaching. The character is too pure and righteous to be believed.

The scenes in the play involve comedy are the most effective and entertaining. In Mill’s class a student presents a paper that offers a radical way to change the education system. A teacher must fulfill any reasonable qualifications, every teacher must prove that he or she has had a long relationship with at least one other human being.

One of the better scenes in the play involves a short change of character for Mitchell. She becomes a second nature teacher who tries to instill a spirit of pride in even those who care less. A member of the high school class, Dave Gordon, a sophomore in aviation technology, was excellent as a student who was disillusioned with school. There is one in every high school class, a potential dropout whose uniform is jeans, a t-shirt and a leather motorcycle jacket.

With the exception of a few scenes the play never gets off the ground. It lacks energy at one point or another. They Liked It All the Time, will be presented at 8 p.m. through Sunday at the Calypso Stage in the Communications Building. Tickets are $1 and may be purchased at the door.

Student association aids Venezuela

By Dennis Miller

Every country in the world desires to become self-sufficient. SIU is helping Venezuela as well as other underdeveloped countries achieve that goal.

The Venezuelan Student Association (VSA) is an organization formed two months ago designed to prepare Venezuelan students for SIU, which may in turn help them return to their country through a college education. It is well known that our students come to SIU," said Ruben Pinto, secretary-general of VSA. "There is an excellent English curriculum here, and unlike most universities the classes aren’t so crowded.

Every Venezuelan student is a member of VSA because it is designed to help each new Venezuelan student to get acquainted with SIU.

Besides helping the new Venezuelan students, VSA is also interested in exchanging folklore and culture with Americans. Jaime Rada (VSA) member said, "We want to strengthen our relationship with Americans. None of us know anything about the United States."

Music students to direct concert

The School of Music will present a student-conducted concert at 8 p.m. Wednesday in the SIU Auditorium. The concert will feature two original works written by music students. One is a variation for solo piano, "Three Songs," by senior Tony Romano and the other is a brass quintet ensemble, written by junior Dan Ross.

Four other musical selections will also be performed at the concert. Admission to the concert is free.
Police investigate burglaries

Two burglaries and two alleged shoplifting incidents were reported this week by the Carbondale police.

Hermaa Haas, 62 W. Owens St., reported that her apartment was broken into between 3 and 4 p.m. Thursday. Nothing was reported stolen, however.

Thomas Kelley, 28 S. Murphyboro, was arrested Thursday afternoon for allegedly stealing some merchandise from Westroads Lingerie and Mardi gras Shopping Center. He was released on $25 bond to appear in court.

Peggy L. Collins, of Cabotz, was arrested Thursday for allegedly shoplifting at K-Mart. Illinois 13, 25 bond was released on $25 bond to appear in court.

'SNetwork' is first-line contact for those seeking counseling

By Mary Tellman

Rachal Yi. is lonely. Her son Norman is an alcoholic and his marriage is falling apart. Rachal called the Jackson County Network for professional counseling for her own marital and drinking problems.

A cooperative effort of the Southern Players and the Jackson County Mental Health Center, the Network provides immediate availability of services to both individuals and agencies throughout the county on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis.

"The Network can be a first line contact for persons seeking help or information," said Gene Jacobs, coordinator for the Jackson County Network. "All calls are strictly confidential and on a first name only basis. The names were changed in the case of Rachal and Norman."

Network handles a variety of phone calls. Anything a caller considers serious wants to explore further is handled. It's raised paraprofessionals.

Most calls deal with loneliness, depression and interpersonal problems. According to Jacobs, people call from people just seeking general information.

"It's having a relationship problem, their girlfriend broke up with them and they're depressed and confused, and it can turn into an emotional trauma," said Jacobs. "If they are unable to look at their own resources to work out their problems and they have no friends they feel they can turn to, they can turn to us. It is not our intention to make judgments regarding what other or views to be important or a crisis in his or her life."

The Network uses creativity to support and encourage attitudes of self-confidence for individual callers. "They try to have callers realize the availability of a situation they confront and to explore strategies open to themselves in resolving the problem." Jacobs said.

The Network is a first line contact for mental health related emergencies or for people requiring information referral or simply "talking out" an everyday bothered some situation.

The Network reaches out to anyone in the county seeking assistance. Jacobs said that about two-thirds of the phone calls are from non-students with a variety of problems addressed.

"We receive on the average three special phone calls per week," said Jacobs. "But a majority of the phone calls range from general information, homelessness, marital and family problems, loneliness, to someone who just needs someone to talk to."

"We receive a call from a woman who has been raped, we deal with the immediate situation," said Jacobs. "We then contact the rape center for her and they will send someone to help her."

The Network provides a mechanism for peer counseling to people that feel uncomfortable talking to professionals by providing the opportunity to talk to a paraprofessional peer.

Senior citizens learn crafts

Senior citizens looking for ways to increase their incomes can turn to a newly-opened crafts training center at 3 p.m.

The project's aim is to teach older persons some of the things that can turn into dollars, said David Owen, coordinator of crafts for the Illini Area Agency on Aging. Specialties and the funds are charged to a grant from the Illini Area Agency on Aging.

There are four areas of training—each Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday, one hour a week, each at the project's headquarters, located at 615 W. Grand Avenue.

Two classes deal with natural materials, one with wool to train how to use stuffed animals and dolls. Instructors are practicing craftsmen, said Owen and consultants also come in to present other aspects of craft training.

So far, a little more than half of the senior citizens in the program have sold their crafts. Owen remarked, "You don't expect a 10 per cent success rate. If 25 per cent become actively involved in crafts selling and they earn a moderate income from it, we have succeeded.

The program is still in its testing stages and Owen and consultants are looking to recruit new volunteers. Negotiations are underway to see if SIU instructors can be contracted to teach the program, he said.

Learning lab improves reading, writing skills

By Michael Field
Student Writer

Students who wish to improve their second language reading and comprehension, writing and study skills may receive help in these and other related areas at the newly established learning lab in the Blue Barracks just north of the Brush Towers.

The lab, which is open to all students, seeks to provide the individual student with ready and readily available in a formal classroom setting.

"Actually, we try to meet each student's needs no matter what academic area they are having difficulty with," says Vivian Snyder, one of the faculty members who is donating time to the lab. "Any student needs help with something during his stay here at the lab. And we try to give them that help. If we can't, we will direct them to someone who can."

The major problem facing the lab so far, Snyder says, has been informing students of the lab's existence.

"We've had only two or so students use the facility since we opened in September," she says. "And only one has been sent over to us by a faculty member. We've had to rely mostly on word of mouth to get the word around."

The lab receives a grant, for this year only, of $9,400 from the President's Academic Excellence Fund, and will have to obtain other funding if it is to remain operative.

We have been looking into possible assistance from the Federal Government, perhaps "HEW," Snyder says. "But nothing is definite right now."

In addition to the nine faculty members, two graduate assistants are available to help students with any problems they might have. All help is offered free of charge to any student wishing to avail the time.

Funds to provide faculty with mini-sabbaticals

By Peggy Sagone
Daily Student Writer

Full-time faculty members on permanent or counting appointments soon will be able to take mini-sabbaticals paid for by SIU's Academic Excellence Fund.

The new policy for mini-sabbaticals was submitted to the Academic Senate by James G. Smith, chairman of the Academic Senate and systems engineering, and accepted by Frank E. Hahnenberger, president of WSU, for academic affairs and research.

Funded through the Academic Excellence Fund, the $3,000 grant will be awarded yearly to at least 30 faculty members.

A maximum stipend of $600 will be allotted to each participant to cover travel, lodging and meals.

"What we are trying to do is to show our support," says Vivian Snyder. "We take it as an introduction to some of the new techniques and knowledge," said Smith.

The duration of the mini-sabbatical will be a maximum of one week.

"This is not only for personal gain for the individual involved, but we hope that it will have a classroom effect. The information is expected to be passed on," said Smith.

An interested faculty member must submit seven copies of the proposal. 70th his department head and dean to be sent to the Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs and research by Nov. 1, 1975.

Proposals will be reviewed by the committees and its recommendations will be forwarded to the vice president for academic affairs and research.

Survey contest to aid disabled persons

By Lady Lee Ogilvie
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Carbondale high school juniors and seniors are being urged to enter a survey contest to determine how disabled persons are meeting the daily challenges of life in the Labor Day Community Service Survey Contest.

The theme of the 1978 "Ability Aware" Survey contest is "A Profile of Achievement: How a Handicapped Person Lived," according to Trudy Miller, coordinator of the Community Service Survey Contest.

Carbondale Junior High School and Labor Day Community Service Survey Contest contest.

"A Profile of Achievement: How a Handicapped Person Lived," according to Trudy Miller, coordinator of the Community Service Survey Contest.

The contest is being conducted for the Handicapped (GCH) in Southern Illinois.

"It is an opportunity for the state's high school juniors and seniors to have the opportunity to write about the handicapped people by entering this contest and at the same time compete for cash scholarships donated by the Disabled American Veterans.

The theme of the 1978 "Ability Aware" Survey contest is "A Profile of Achievement: How a Handicapped Person Lived," according to Trudy Miller, coordinator of the Community Service Survey Contest.

One aspect of the contest, sponsored by the Disabled American Veterans Department of Marion and East St. Clair County, is to be entered by a high school student, and one entry per student only, in either public or parochial school must interview three handicapped persons, of veterans and civic groups, handicapped persons, their families and their friends. The interviews will determine how the disabled people have adapted to daily living.

Survey contest

The student then summarizes his findings in a report of no more than six pages, 8 1/2 inches by 11 ins., double spaced, typed or mimeographed, and submit the report to the contest at A-214, 110 South University, Marion, Ill.

Cash scholarships of $1,000 are awarded the national winners in two categories, high school and college. The survey contest will be announced on a Hill sheet such as "Ability Aware." The ten entries are sent to state judges who will notify winners by telephone and letter. A report for handicapped people will be written in the Student's Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped, Washington D.C., March 1, 1979.

Said the 1976 Poster Contest of the President's Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped is geared toward students' use of their artistic ability to help public awareness. The national winners, besides receiving $1,000 scholarship awards, will also receive a trip to Washington, D.C. to attend the Annual Meeting of the President's Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped in May. The trip expenses will be provided by the State Federation of the APLC.

Said that the objective of the contest is to draw public attention to the fact that many disabled people are assets when they are gainfully employed. The contest is to encourage the public to support this idea, to assist the public, through ignorance, fails to see the person as a viable and contributing citizen of the community," Singh said.

Safety Commission discusses problems of child pedestrians

By Terri Bradford
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The pedestrian situation at South Marion School was reviewed at a meeting of the Marion and East St. Clair County Safety Commission.

A Sept. 22 and 31 survey conducted by a local school official said that 10,000 pedestrians in six months had been seen entering or exiting the school while crossing the street.

At the Thursday night meeting, Ellis P. Boyd of the Public Works Department recommended that the survey be conducted again during the winter months to determine the number of children who are crossing the street before attempting to cross the street.

Children are sometimes forced to stand in the middle of the street, as traffic flow prevented crossing to the other side. In most instances, school children do not cross the street at the crosswalk.

"We are still waiting for a reply from Mr. Boyd," said James E. Eckert, manager of Marion's Public Works Department.

The letter also advised interested people to read the handbook and a friend. The interview will determine how the disabled people have adapted to daily living.

Council schedules Sunday picnic

The Council for Exceptional Children is sponsoring a picnic for handicapped children in Jackson County at the Illinois State Fairgrounds from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday.

A spokesperson for the group said the picnic is to "give the handicapped children a chance to enjoy some fun in the sun." Recreation programs at the state fair are restricted to recreation including horse riding and boat trips.

The public is invited to the picnic, she said. A bus will leave the UIL Student Council Building at 9 a.m. for participants. The bus and the picnic are free.

Persons planning on driving to the picnic should take Illinois 13 east and turn right at John A. Logan college. Direction signs will be posted from there.
The key to a defense that employs the nose guard is to get the offensive line to double team him. If Jones can get the center and a guard or tackle to block him over, that will leave another Saluki open to make a tackle or shoot into the backfield.

This gives some of the other players the glory but the real problem for Jones is that he faces linemen who are 340 or 350 pounds. He is only 5-foot-10 and 208 pounds.

"I get double teamed a lot," Jones said of his battles in the trenches. "But that leaves some other guys open to make tackles."

Jones admits that "I don't like getting doubled team. But you never know when a team is going to do it. Some do and some don't."

Jones has not experienced good health during his career at SIU. Just about every year he has been hampered by one injury or another. This year was no different. He injured his knee a few weeks ago and had to sit out the Long Beach State game, although he did all the sprints on kickoffs.

The powerfully built Jones has been the most identifiable football player on the field and off the last few years when he is healthy and playing up to par. "Jones is in on the tackle," is heard repeatedly over the public address system.

Around campus, the nose guard is known mostly by his first name. His always bright, smiling face and twinkling eyes give him the happy-go-lucky look.

He can be tough on the field, though, and has built a reputation among opponents as being a tough customer. During an interview last week, Gerry Hart, Illinois State coach, had only one question he was concerned about getting an answer for.

"Is Primus going to play?" he questioned.

Right now Primus is playing the best he has all year which could be due to the fact that he is healthy again.

"My feelings haven't changed towards Primus since drills started," defensive line coach Bill Matan commented. "He's working hard and trying to lead by example. He played better last week than he did in any previous week."

Although Jones is strong and aggressive and a "helluva a kicker" according to Matan, he still has one drawback where physical attributes are concerned the coach said.

"He is handicapped somewhat, because of his height. That hurts his pass rush some, but we are working on that with him."

The whole defense has been hurting in different spots all season, but Jones said there are signs of advancement.

"We've been improving every week," Jones said, echoing the words of Tom Ippolito, who will do the same thing a few weeks ago.

Jones said he has never been so winning team at SIU so there is no more pressure to win games than in the past.

"The fans accept you or they don't," he said point blank. "We get pressure because they want a win, too. People criticize and everything but it's not as easy as it sounds. Wins are not easy to come by, so Jones, sounding a little frustrated.

"We just have to play our best and hope we do better."

SIU's game can be heard on three local radio stations: WSTU 93, WCFM, WCIU 10 AM and FM and WJPP 1340 from Harrisburg.
