City lets staff try for manager

By Jackie Spinner

The City Council voted Thursday to allow the City's department and division heads to apply for the position of city manager.

Interim City Manager Jeff

Doberty said the City had between 10 and 15 department and division heads. The council eliminated the opportunity for internal candidates to apply for the position Tuesday.

In a 4 to 2 vote, the council voted to require that applicants for city manager have at least 10 years experience in city government. The City has a six year experience as city manager or assistant city manager in a large city.

However, it failed to exclude qualifications for internal candidates who apply.

Councilman John Yow suggested including internal applicants, but the vote to accept the other qualifications for city manager failed.

Councilman John Mills told the council, "I don't think it's proper to set qualifications so we eliminate all of our own staff." Mayor Neil Dillard said the qualification should be broad enough, yet selective enough.

"Being in-house, it has an impact on you and the whole organization," Dillard said.

According to the approved clause, qualified internal candidates must have "six years of administrative experience within Carbondale City government with experience as a department or division head.

The deadline for applications for city manager is Nov. 18.

Hurricane Joan hovering close to Central America

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Hurricane Joan, packing killer winds up to 110 mph, lurked off the coast of Central America Thursday, sending thousands of people fleeing a fugitive that has seen only two hurricanes this century. Mainland Colombia, raked by Hurricane Joan earlier in the week, cleaned up after the storm, which caused widespread destruction and floods and left at least 14 people dead.

Paris strike disrupts transportation service

PARIS (UPI) — Transportation workers, teachers and postal workers went on strike Thursday, disrupting subways, train and airline services in an effort to force the Socialist government to abandon plans to increase public sector salaries. The strike was organized by the communist-led Confederation Generale du Travail labor union and supported by other unions representing public employees, also disrupted mail deliveries and forced schools to send students home.

OPEC: Chances of reduced production good

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Key OPEC officials gathered in Madrid for a special meeting said Thursday chances are good that the 13-nation cartel can slow down production and halt the decline of oil prices. Eight of the largest members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries prepared to meet at the Algerian Embassy in Madrid in an urgent effort to forge a consensus on a new oil quota.

King gestures to mend Saudi-Iran relations

MANAMA, Bahrain (UPI) — Saudi Arabia's King Fahd has made his second gesture of good will to Iran in less than a week, ordering a halt to a media campaign against the Islamic fundamentalist regime in Tehran, state-run Radio Riyadh said Thursday.

President pushes reunification with North Korea

WASHINGTON (UPI) — South Korea's President Roh Tae-Woo won a pledge of U.S. support Thursday for his drive for reconciliation on the Korean peninsula, including steps by the United States to improve relations with North Korea, fresh from an appearance before the U.N. General Assembly, where he vowed to work with the North Korean regime.

Roh reviewed his overtures to the north in talks with President Reagan at the White House.

Reagan undecided about Marcos indictment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan said Thursday there may be no reason for him to block Justice Department plans to indict former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos on embezzlement charges. "I would think that it would have to be a matter of foreign policy to bring it in my court, not just some legal technicality," Reagan told reporters at the White House. "Things come to me when it involves foreign policy."

"Happy Birthday" sells for more than a song

PRINCETON, N.J. (UPI) — "Happy Birthday to You" is up for sale, but the rights to one of the most popular tunes in the world are not going for a song. The familiar four-line birthday song and the other tunes in the Birch Tree Ltd. catalog could command a price that has been estimated as high as $12 million, a Birch Tree executive said Thursday.

Kraft not being pressured into takeover negotiations

GLENVIEW, Ill. (UPI) — Kraft Inc., the target of one of the largest takeovers in U.S. history, will not be pressured into immediate negotiations with Philip Morris Co., Kraft officials announced Thursday in a tersely worded letter. Philip Morris launched an $11.8 billion bid for Kraft, based in Glenview, Ill., after the stock market closed Monday. The $90 per share cash tender offer sparked frenzied trading on the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday and Wednesday, with Kraft leading the most active list.

Museum decorator presents exhibits creatively

By Phyllis Coon
Staff Writer

An array of exhibits are seen during a tour of the University Museum.

But the exhibits don't arrive at the Museum with "easy to exhibit instructions," the Museum exhibits designer, said.

Long before an exhibit arrives, many hours are spent by the curator of the museum researching and selecting artifacts to be shown, Alan Harasimowicz, Museum exhibits designer, said.

"It's a team effort when the Museum gets ready for a new exhibit," Harasimowicz, who has worked at the Museum for 11 years, said. "But my job is to take the objects, whether they're from our collection, from the community or from a touring collection, and present them in an aesthetically pleasant and interesting configuration."

THE AMOUNT of time Harasimowicz spends preparing and setting up an exhibit varies, he said.

"Preparations can take weeks of working with space and color," Harasimowicz said. "If I have a show coming down quickly, I have very little time to prepare. So I try to stage in advance what the exhibit will look like."

As far as staging exhibits in advance, Harasimowicz said he has a "pretty good batting record."

"The finished exhibit usually ends up looking like what I wanted it to," Harasimowicz said. "I'm so familiar with the space that I picture it in my mind."

BUT STAGING ideas don't always come to mind easily, he said. When the Museum had an exhibit of new acquisitions, Harasimowicz said he thought about staging ideas for weeks and hadn't come up with anything he liked.

"I was getting nervous because the opening was drawing near," Harasimowicz said. "One of the problems was the wide range of pieces."

The exhibit ranged from bronze sculptures to a bomb-damaged'sighting, he said.

"I came up with the idea of using different levels of platforms after watching the athletes march into the coliseum during the 1984 Olympics," Harasimowicz said. "What tied the exhibit together was the lighting and colors."

"EXHIBITS WITH history and science are what Harasimowicz usually works with, he said.

But Harasimowicz said he doesn't want people to think he does everything himself. Student workers help set up exhibits. Jayber Laque, a sophomore, helps extensively, he said.

"He has an attitude about the work that helps with ideas," Harasimowicz said. "I've often said I'd rather have a student who doesn't know a single thing about fabrications than a student who thinks he is a master at the work."

Besides the students who work with the exhibits, Harasimowicz said he also depends on students who work as security and gallery attendants.

AN EXHIBIT Harasimowicz set up that is drawing a lot of people is the coal mine exhibit, he said.

"A lot of technical and engineering and geology classes are coming to see it," he said.

The most challenging aspect of the job is the broad audience he has to please, Harasimowicz said.

"Little children, students and the community all come to the exhibits," he said. "An exhibit has to be appealing to all these people. I just try to get a happy medium."

Budget constraints have hit Harasimowicz's job too, he said.

"I'VE BECOME a master of recycling materials," Harasimowicz said. "We don't throw anything away here. Some of the materials have been used in four or five exhibits. I live in a lumber yard, but I'm very pleased that I'm able to keep the materials."

Lighting, color and exhibit cases all help to set the atmosphere of the Museum, he said.

"But there always is the alternative of putting the pieces in a line so people can view them without any feeling," Harasimowicz said.

Sexual harassment: SIU-C gets tougher

THE REVISED SIU-C sexual harassment policy, though not as effective as it could be, has made great strides in combating sexual harassment on campus.

A major component in the policy is the implementation of educational programs to create an environment on campus as free as possible of sexual harassment.

THE PROGRAM, under the revised policy, seeks to educate victims and potential victims of their rights, potential harassers about acts that constitute sexual harassment, University personnel and students about prohibited conduct, administrators about the proper procedures for handling complaints and the University community about the costs of emotional stress, poor working conditions, lost time and dissolution of effort.

EDUCATING THE University community probably is the most effective tool in combating sexual harassment. In many harassment cases, those accused may be unaware that their actions are considered offensive. Although we do not excuse such behavior, even when done in ignorance, education can prevent the creation of an environment that constitutes sexual harassment is a much better alternative to punishing the offender if such actions can be prevented before the fact.

CONTRARY TO past policy, the revised policy provides the victim with an advocate who can serve as an informational resource, confidant and the victim, but also may encourage other victims to report instances of sexual harassment. According to a study done last year by William Baily, affirmative action officer for the University, one in eight female SIU-C students are sexually harassed during her campus life.

THE ONLY question that arises from the revised policy is President John Guyon's competence in enforcing the laws. Even if the accused harasser is found guilty by the investigative board, the president has the power to override the decision of the board in the only case Guyon made a ruling on.

Guyon said, "I don't represent the University with a capital "U". I represent the entire University — including the victim."

If Guyon is sincere about this statement, then he should bow out in any decisions on sexual harassment. He may find it hard to remain objective if he is forced to fire a professor who is of great value to the University.

Yes: Activist says it can bring in new ideas

By Patrick Quinn

This Nov. 8 Illinois voters will decide whether to call a constitutional convention to consider a number of proposed changes to the state Constitution. The people of Illinois should vote "yes" for this referendum.

For more than 20 years, American voters have used state constitutional conventions to break political stalemates and breathe fresh air and new ideas into the political system.

Indeed, the very reason the current Illinois Constitution has an automatic provision calling for a constitutional convention every 20 years is to give the people a practical check against legislative inaction on key subjects.

Important constitutional issues such as higher ethics standards for public officials, property tax reform, more equitable funding for education, strengthening utility regulations, and establishing citizen initiative and recall have been killed by legislators year after year since 1970.

Too many incumbent legislators and lobbyists have used their political power and money in the past two decades to block needed changes and reforms.

A constitutional convention allows voters to bypass politicians who won't reform themselves.

Admittedly, only fundamental and complete problems should justify the calling of a state constitutional convention. But the painful fact is that Illinois government has slipped into a dangerous state of gridlock and decay in recent years.

For example, we have to change Illinois' complicated and unfair property tax system, which harms families and businesses and drives away talent. Illinois relies too much on a 19th century property tax scheme to finance local government, especially education.

Similarly, we must establish non- partisan ethics standards in our Constitution.

The constitutional convention referendum gives Illinois voters a once-in-a-generation opportunity to break the stranglehold of power held by entrenched politicians and lobbyists. Actual experiences in nine states which have had constitutional conventions since 1970 shows they can be run economically and free from special interest pressure.

In Illinois, a full-state constitutional convention can be held in 1990 for $15 million, which works out to about 30 cents a citizen or a tiny fraction of the state's $22 billion annual budget.

History shows that a constitutional convention is an investment in Illinois' future, particularly when measured against the cost of inaction. If the Legislature continues to do nothing about bad schools, unfair property taxes, and uninterrupted political scandals.

opponents don't; trust the common sense and good judgment of the people. Illinoisans have used the assignment of elective convention delegates and notifying proposed constitutional changes.

Illinois citizens should soundly reject the maxim of these naysayers.

No: Secretary of state says it's too costly

By Jim Edgar

To borrow from an old saying, our state Constitution is in need of a major repair — especially when more than 30 million dollars would get stuck with a "repair" bill of more than $30 million.

Our current Constitution, approved by voters in December 1970, is working well. And it makes no sense, in these days of beefy demands on Illinois' state treasury, to spend millions of dollars to revise the Constitution fundamentally and sound document.

Indeed, a constitutional convention could divert precious resources from urgent concerns for our state — such as the adequate funding of education. Indeed, it could conceivably become a forum for extremists on both the left and the right.

Why spend millions? Why risk the possibility that a constitutional convention will be a brawling, single-issue cauldron? Why invite distraction and delay at a time when our people and their leaders should be addressing major challenges? Can Illinois really move ahead while it wastes a potentially massive revision of its current Constitution?

Some of the most vocal proponents of a convention have depicted it as a cure for whatever ails the state. Please listen to them closely. They talk about dramatically increasing funding for education. They also talk about cutting taxes. The sales people make an appealing pitch, but they don't tell us how they can give more to education without raising taxes on taxpayers.

For example, the education leaders of this state have listened closely to the pitch and they simply aren't buying it. In fact, they're demanding more from the Legislature.

The last time the idea of a constitutional convention surfaced, the Taxpayers Federation also called it a "no-brainer." The group has been joined in its efforts by the National Taxpayers United of Illinois which has turned the question of a convention into a referendum on taxes.

The group wants a limit on state income tax rates imposed and wants to curtail the home rule taxing powers of city governments. Also favoring a convention is a group of high-powered lawyers who is pushing for an amendment allowing for the appointment, rather than election of judges. Gary Johnson, a spokesman for Con-Con for Court Reform, said judges as judges have to seek campaign contributions if they were

New Rule: Debate is on over constitutional reform

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) - Does Illinois need a new Constitution? It sounds like a simple question, but there's no simple answer.

The people of Illinois and many groups throughout the state have a constitutional convention. But the current document, adopted in 1970, isn't big enough and any necessary fine tuning can be accomplished without a total rewrite.

But others, including political activist Patrick Quinn, contend that individuals who want to call a new Constitution are the same individuals who again and again block their "good ideas" in the Legislature.

Voters will be asked to settle the dispute on Election Day, Nov. 8, when they are asked to vote "yes" or "no" on whether to call a constitutional convention. The question is required every 20 years.

Quinn, who spearheaded the successful campaign to reduce the size of the House by one-third, has come out with a new reason each week in his statewide "trust the people" campaign to garner support for the convention call.

Among his pet issues are limited taxation, open primary elections in which voters do not have to declare their political affiliation, the ability to recalled incompetent elected officials and the appointment reforms for judges and judges.

appointed—a practice he charges is the root of the corruption uncovered by Operation Greylord, the probe of Chicago's judicial system. Those pushing for so-called merit selection, and who have been frustrated by the Legislature's repeated refusal to approve a pro-merit constitutional amendment itself. But Illinois Supreme Court Justice Thomas Moran, who also favors merit selection, does not favor a convention.

The opposition to a constitutional convention isn't like a who's who of Illinois politics and contains groups with widely divergent viewpoints, said Sen. George Ryan, Secretary of State Jim Edgar, the State Chamber of Commerce, the League of Women Voters, the Illinois Farm Bureau, the Illinois Public Action Council, Illinois NOW and the PTA.

"We don't all agree on all the issues, but we do agree that for a constitutional convention is not now," said Lana Hustele, a member of the Committee to Preserve the Illinois Constitution.

One opposition to a constitutional convention is the citizen petition drive or a constitutional convention. Ryan noted lawmakers are elected by the public and can be thrown out of office if they do not represent their constituents. She also said many of the people who would be elected as delegates to the convention, likely would be the same folks Quinn continues to battle in Springfield.

"It gives them (citizens) a chance to strike out against government. They feel like they have an opportunity to throw the bums out," Ryan said.

The question needs the OK of a majority of those voting on the question or a majority of those voting in the election.
Woman faces charges in baby's death

Veronica L. April, a former SIUC student, will appear in Jackson County Circuit Court today on a charge that she murdered the infant she gave birth to April 1987.

The Joliet resident will appear before Judge David Watt Jr. at 9 a.m. today.

April was charged Oct. 6 with three counts of first-degree murder in connection with the death of an infant found April 15 in a dumpster near Freeman and Hester streets. When April attended the University as a computer science major she lived at 304 W. Washington, D.C.

Jackson County State's Attorney John Clemons charged that April knowingly caused the death of the infant she gave birth to by drowning it in a toilet bowl.

Various panelists representing one-fifth of the people who have died of AIDS, Stolz said.

Among the panelists are a social worker, a medical intern, and a psychologist who has counseled the families of AIDS patients.

Stolz said he has noticed how many times, people just let things happen.

"You can be upset but you need to do something about it... apathy isn't cool anymore," Stolz said.

As of May 1988, St. Louis estimated 114 AIDS cases, and 56 in 1989, the CDC stated.

Cases for Carbondale are not considered accurate because if a student is diagnosed as having AIDS, the statistic goes to that person's hometown.

Stolz said that AIDS is not just a gay disease but affects hemophiliacs, intravenous drug users, and those who receive or have received blood transfusions.

People cannot get AIDS by sharing the same house, using the same dishes, kissing, or in general, living with someone.

People need to be concerned and aware, and information is the key way to help people understand the virus and prevent themselves from infections, Stolz said.
The train's itinerary showed it will have traveled over 1,000 miles by the time it reaches its destination Dec. 3 in Tahlequah, Okla. Archie Mouse, Cherokee Indian and a member of the Native American Indian Association, said he will stay with the train for the entire trip.

Mouse said he joined the train when it hit Imonyra, Tenn., a place he had been keeping up with it in "Mary White Pooles," his nickname for his 1988 train Am.

Mouse said the train is reliving what happened to the Indians when they were kicked off their land by the government.

"We're doing this to make sure that people don't forget what happened," he said.

But the members on the train have it easy compared to what the Indians went through during the original Trail of Tears, he said.

"On the real Trail of Tears the wagons were only used to carry supplies for the horses and the soldiers. They were herded like cows and moved out of their homes. Whatever they had on their backs, that's what they took."

Some people may not have noticed, Mouse said, but the Trail of Tears was considered long and out of the way for the Indians. Fears could have taken the Indians across the rivers, he said, but President Andrew Jackson purposely made the route the way it was.

"His main purpose was to wear them out and kill them," Mouse said.

The total number of deaths in the march is estimated at 4,000, one-fourth of the Cherokee nation, he said.

Mouse said many people were looking for the stereotypical Indian to be on the train. "People aren't realizing that although there are not a lot of Indians on the train, everyone has Indian somewhere in their family," he said.

Gulley, who has Cherokee and Blackfoot in his family, said his great-grandmother was an Indian princess, the daughter of Chief Red Cliff. Mouse said he is a descendant of Chief John Ross, the man who appealed the Supreme Court decision against the removal of the Indians in the 1800s.

His ancestor won the appeal, Mouse said, and the Court decided not to make the Indians move. Andrew Jackson overturned the decision.

Mouse said he is disappointed the government has not given the train any recognition.

"I think that's a shame since (President Ronald) Reagan implemented this year as 'The Year of the Indian,'" he said.

The train's next destination is the Trail of Tears State Park in Missouri.
Southern Illinois marketplace still in stage of development

Jim Rea announced plans for the marketplace, which is to be located on Interstate 57 near Rend Lake, in Carbondale, Ill., 62901. A market opening ceremony is scheduled for Oct. 25 at the Rend Lake Golf Course Restaurant.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the progress thus far and to receive input from those who will be affected by the development of this facility. The marketplace will provide local craftspeople the opportunity to market their products to the large number of travelers who pass through Southern Illinois. For more information, contact Rep. Rea’s office at 113 East Market, Christopher, Ill., 62822. The phone number is (618) 724-9444.

Take Back the Night March allows women to feel safe

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

Women's Safety Week will hold a Take Back the Night Rally and March starting at 8 p.m. on the corner of Illinois and Grand avenues.

"The goal of the march is to give women a chance to be out at night and feel safe," Susan Powell, campus safety representative, said. Women will lead the march followed by people in wheelchairs and then men and women bringing up the end, Powell said.

After the march, a rally will be held in the Woody Hall courtyard. Speakers at the rally will be Susan Doerge, a health educator from Nicaragua; Mayor Neil Dillard; Julie Clausen, women's center executive director; and Polly Poskin, director of the Illinois Coalition Against Sexual Assault, she said.

Music will be provided by the Illini Band. Performers at the rally, Powell said.

Dix man charged in murder

Also accused in abduction, assault of 10-year-old girl

MOUNT VERNON, Ill. (UPI) — Cecil Sutherland sits calmly in a tightly guarded courtroom Thursday as a judge read charges against him — that he allegedly abducted, sexually assaulted and murdered a 10-year-old Amy Schults of Kell in 1997.

Sutherland, of rural Dixon, south of Kell, is between his court-appointed co-public defenders James Hansen and Bernard Milton, as Judge Lehman Krause read the three charges of first-degree murder and one each of aggravated criminal sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping.

Krause ordered that Sutherland be held without bond and set an arraignment hearing on Monday. He said blood, saliva and hair samples from the defendant be taken for Friday, Oct. 28. Krause ordered that Sutherland be taken for a hair sample from the Prisons for Healing Purposes Only and Debra Brewe. Julie Paseboud and Tami Spicry will perform poetry, prose and narratives at the rally, Powell said.

Sutherland, who should be in a wheelchair and have a beard, did not speak during the hearing in the Jefferson County courtroom. Spectators were checked with a metal detector before they were admitted to enter.

Sheriff Bob Fitchford said Thursday there had been some "street threats" against Sutherland but "nothing on paper." He said Sutherland is being quartered alone in a jail cell under close scrutiny.

Chesapeake Bay fisherman typically undecided

Editor's note: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch sent 10 reporters around the country to interview ordinary voters who will help choose the next president. This is one story in a series.

By Charlotte Grimes
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

NEW POINT, Va.-For more than 60 years, "Dockie" Hurst has tossed his wire-framed pots into the Chesapeake Bay to catch the big Atlantic blue crabs. Sometimes, when he hauls the pots up, they are full of snapping, squirming, sulky "jimmies" and "socks," male and female crabs. Sometimes, they're not. Dockie never knows what the bay will give him when he casts his pots into its uncertain depths.

It's pretty much the same with presidential elections, he says. You cast your vote, but you don't know what's going to wash up. "You can't predict no answer to what's going to wash up, no that," says Hurst.

"Cause they do exactly backwards of what they tell you you gonna do."

HURST—PROPERLY named A.J.—is a chunky, barrel-shaped man with shoulders and forearms thickened by hauling from the Bay water as many as 200-pound crab pots a day. He has long-tailed blue eyes, tar-colored hair, and permanently reddened face and hands from wind, sun, and salt.

And he is something of a rarity in this small crabbing community, about 50 miles south of Newport News, in that he votes at all.

He inherited his interest from generations of watermen. Hurst and his crabbing neighbors are a fiercely independent lot. For most in New Point, as populations about all 500, the world consists of the bay, the crooks threading past their docks, and local landmarks like Hubert's Store and Dock's Theater.

STRANGERS are looked on with suspicion here—maybe especially—those who move here in search of rural peace and quiet. "Deadrise folks" they are called, those who were not born here but came here. It is not a compliment.

Until recently, few children of crabbers finished school; most got their first shift instead of a bicycle.

Every day except Sunday in the warmer months, the crabs head out to set their pots. Their boats gleam white, with engines giving out a thrum of rumble and high-prowed called "deadrises" knifing through the waves.

Crowders coax or wrench whatever they can from the bay: oysters, conchs, menhaden, blue crabs. In winter, they dredge for menhaden with engines giving out a thrum of rumble and high-prowed called "deadrises" knifing through the waves.

This was Dockie Hurst's life since he was 11. Now, at 53, he owns two boats, the "Miss Norma" and the "Miss Lana," and his own small docks.

Like most of his neighbors, Hurst has no truck with the federal government, barely tolerates local government, and wants nothing but to be left alone. Ask him what he thinks a new president should do, and he looks at you blankly. "I don't care," he says. "It don't seem to make much difference around here."

He isn't worried about issues that bother some outsiders, like ocean pollution and drugs. He doesn't see much of either, he says. Right now, the crabs are plentiful and selling for 15 cents a pound, a good price. There's no reason to believe a new president, of any stripe, will make much difference in that.

CHARACTERISTICALLY, Hurst, like most crammers around here, won't link himself with either the Republican or Democratic parties. He's an independent, he says stiffly, as though the question is an insult. "I usually vote the way I think is for the best one," says Hurst.

In the recent past, that has meant Ronald Reagan. Hurst hedges when asked about Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis. He's been out "conchin'"—dredging for crabs;—at night, he says, and hasn't had a chance to have much of either one on television.

"What you think about Ollie North?" he asks. "Some of the boys around here think he's what we need."

HK WILL make up his mind after hearing the discussions around the docks. Hubert's Store, the Masonic Lodge. "I talk to the people, who they're gonna vote for," says Hurst, solemnly. "That's what helps me more than anything. I ain't got no education. So I get out and hear what people say, what they think is the best."

Scandal enrages families

SPRINGFIELD, Tenn. (UPI) — Deputies have opened more than 30 graves in a two-state cemetery scandal, finding trash and bodies without coffins to the horror of families, and the jailed undertaker went into an isolation cell Thursday for his own protection.

Family members have wailed in grief and outrage as the bodies of their loved ones were uncovered during the past two weeks in Tennessee and Kentucky in the investigation into burials by Bobby Wilks.

"I could very easily have him killed. All it would take is one phone call," Mary Masterson said as the grave of her mother, Gladys Birdwell Clubbs, was opened. "She's not a garbage disposal."

Deputies found two embalming fluid bottles and two soft drink bottles inside the grave on the grounds of Owen's Chapel United Methodist Church near Springfield.

Twenty-three graves have been opened in Robertson and Sumner counties in Tennessee and Simpson County in Kentucky, and investigators have permits to open 10 more. Many of the bodies were found without coffins or the $400 vaults that families bought to protect caskets in the ground.

One body was found wrapped only in a cloth and, Tuesday, the remains of a stillborn child were found buried about a foot deep in a blue plastic bag. Officials said Wilks promised the bereaved family that he would bury their child in a coffin.

Wilks, 52, who owns Barber's Funeral Home in the community of Milldale near Springfield, is charged with fraud and jailed under $90,000 bond in Robertson County.

Loan for judge leads to lawyer's disbarment

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — The Supreme Court Thursday disbarred Chicago lawyer and banker Harold J. Green, who helped convicted Greylord Judge Reginald Holzer obtain a $24,000 loan in 1981.

Green, 83, is the principal owner of the Bank of Commerce and Industry in Chicago. Green arranged the loan from the Harris Bank and Trust Co. and purchased the loan note while his bank had a case assigned to Holzer's court concerning a foreclosure proceeding to recover a $900,000 loan.

A Harris Bank official testified Holzer was not qualified for the loan and the 15 percent interest rate was below market rates at the time. Holzer did not participate in the final settlement of the case.

Justice said the evidence of Green's role in securing the loan supported charges that he engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice and violated the rule against lawyers making gifts or loans to judges.

"A hallmark of our judicial system is the fairness and impartiality of judges, an impartiality which is impeded by conduct such as that of (Green)," Justice Joseph Cunningham wrote.

Police Blotter

Joseph W. Thorner, 22, and Kyle Mixon, 18, both of University Mall, were arrested and charged with damaging a window at Our Place Group Home, 501 N. 13th St. in Murphysboro. Wednesday night, the Jackson County Sheriff's Department said. Thorner, the convicted felon, also was charged with unlawful use of a weapon, because he was carrying a knife.

Residents at the group home are mentally handicapped adults. Police said the men tried to persuade residents to loan them money. The residents refused, and it is believed the men tried to threaten the residents by cutting open a window screen with a knife, police said.

VIRUS, from Page 1—impossible for anything to be written on the disk.

Another method of disk protection involves getting a "fix shot," a program that prevents one virus from infecting the disk. A sure way to cure a virus is to get the antitoxin or vaccine, another program usually produced by the originator of the virus itself.

This particular virus, named the Pakistani Virus for its place of origin, scrambles data that is on the computer disks. Hazel said the virus will appear with the name C-Brain after it has been passed on to another disk.

When the file name C-Brain is opened, the user will see the message, "Welcome to the dungeon, Contact Basit & Amjad Ltd. for the vaccine." A vaccine is the computer program the erases a virus.

"Actually, it's a beautiful program," Hazel said. "But it's destructive." William Baron, computing affairs director, said the matter is under investigation.

"Yes, we do have a virus. There is no information on the severity or the extent of it," Baron said, adding that more on the subject will be issued at a later date.

Soap opera star to sign autographs at University Mall

Michael Damian, recording artist and actor, will sign autographs in a two-hour question and answer session beginning at 2 p.m. Sunday at University Mall in Carbondale.

Damian portrays the character Danny Romalotti on the award-winning CBS Television Daytime Drama, "The Young and the Restless."

Discovered in the early '80s as part of The Weirs, a Los Angeles club band, Damian was featured in teen magazines, making his first solo appearance locally and on American Bandstand. He also has made several other television appearances.

Man with de-icer offers aid to whales trapped under ice

BARROW, Alaska (UPI) — A helicopter swinging huge cement blocks attached to a cable like a wrecking ball will try and smash holes in a growing arctic ice pack and free three trapped California gray whales, an Alaska official said Thursday.

Warren Matuneak, planning director of the North Slope Borough, called a news conference to announce the decision to bring in a helicopter capable of performing the feat. Details of the plan were being worked out, Matuneak said.

Meanwhile, whirring de-icing machines Thursday reopened two breathing holes in the ice and the drivers may be the key to the ultimate rescue of the huge mammals, a biologist said.

Thickening ice had threatened to snarl a pair of breathing holes and end the trapped whales' 13-day struggle for survival when the de-icing machines, rushed to Alaska on Wednesday by a volunteer Rick Skluzacek of Lakeland, Minn., saved the day.

With an exquisite display of the machines' buzzing, whirring and clattering, the drivers worked until 1:30 a.m. Thursday to get the de-icers running so they could churn up the encroaching ice. The de-icers — which essentially are propellers that churn the water to keep it from freezing — broke the ice slush like low-speed Jacuzzis and the whales came up for air spraying rescuers with their icy mouth from their twin blow holes.

"They're thanking you," said rescue coordinator Ron Morris of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration when interviewing the rescued whales. "I'm thrilled," Skluzacek said.

The whales' battered noses rose and fell in the light of snowmobiles, rescuers running so they could

N.Y. nuclear plant leaks harmful gas

BUCHANAN, N.Y. (UPI) — Radioactive gas leaked for several hours Thursday from the Indian Point 3 power plant, forcing the New York Power Authority to shut down the troubled nuclear unit, just 25 miles north of New York City.

Corrosion perforated a tube in one of the plant's four steam generators, leaking a small amount of radioactive gas into the atmosphere about 11:30 p.m. Wednesday. Power Authority spokesmen Carl Patrick said.

The leak posed no threat to public health, Patrick said, putting the amount of radiation exposure at the edge of the plant site at 0.0045 millirems, less than one-thousandth of that received from an average chest X-ray.

The gradual shutdown of the plant was completed Thursday morning. It was not known when the plant could be reactivated, Patrick said.

The leak was characterized as an "unusual incident" — the lowest of four classifications for incidents at nuclear power plants — and was the fourth leak caused by corroded steam generator tubes since 1978. The plant has been in operation since 1976.

Patrick said the release of radioactive gas into the atmosphere was less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the level permitted by the federal government during normal plant operations.
Congress nears agreement on anit-drug bill provisions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate negotiators, heading warnings that lawmakers may have "gone too far," sealed back some of the sweeping provisions in a massive anti-drug bill Thursday and neared agreement on a final package.

But negotiators still faced last-minute wrangling over a Senate provision to require random drug testing of transportation workers in safety-sensitive positions — a measure opposed in the House.

Most of the other differences between the two bills were resolved in marathon negotiations that lasted until midnight Wednesday and continued Thursday with various members pressing negotiators to preserve their key provisions.

House and Senate leaders, expressing optimism a final package could be settled by the end of day, pushed for a final vote Friday on the last major piece of legislation in the 106th Congress.

Restive lawmakers have begun urging "Free the 106th Congress" buttons and many senators have left Washington to campaign for re-election, virtually ensuring a voice vote in the Senate on any key provisions.

Heat up will hurt the South

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Global warming is likely to shrink the nation's forests, flood huge areas of coastal wetlands, increase water shortages and urban air pollution and cause major crop losses in the South, a federal report predicted Thursday.

The Environmental Protection Agency study said that while higher temperatures could help agriculture in northern states by lengthening the growing season, southern crops face greater risks from heat stress.

In addition, the report said higher temperatures and reduced soil moisture could cause "significant dieback" in southern forests within 30 years to 80 years.

State (Ala.) to a Division II national title one year ago.

Watching Coach Rhoades is a show in itself. From the sidelines, he directs plays to the no-huddle offense with his exaggerated arm-waving. To the casual fan — and is there any other kind at Northern Illinois? — it might appear as if he is trying to flag down a taxi. But Rhoades' signal-calling method has given the Salukis a 3-0 record at McAndrew Stadium.

With this type of leadership, the Salukis will be more than ready for Northern Illinois come Saturday. And even if it takes a last-second field goal by freshman John Bookner, who hasn't missed a PAT this year and kicks 6-yarders in his sleep, the Salukis will prevail.

The Salukis realize Northern Illinois runs the wishbone, too. But when a maroon-clad fan says: "Throw out the 'Bone and let the big Dawg eat!" let's not be confused as to who the 'big Dawg' really is.

A huskie is just a pup compared to a Saluki.

Scott’s team will face tough schedule

By Robert Bllerter

The season’s women’s basketball schedule reads like a list of who’s who among nationally-ranked powerhouse teams. SIU-C will be pitted against No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the nation.

Even though Coach Cindy Scott likes playing tough schedule, she said this time she may have gone too far.

“There’s only one word to describe our schedule this year: brutal,” Scott said.

“My philosophy is to schedule as tough as we can to gain national recognition for our program, but, maybe this year, I’ve overseen it. I sometimes joke that I’m trying to get fired by scheduling so tough.”

Scott, who begins her 12th season as head coach, said this is the first time the Salukis will face two opponents who were part of the NCAA Final Four last year.

Ronald Tennessee and Cal-State Long Beach were final four teams last year, and this year they find themselves sitting atop the preseason polls rated No. 1 and 2 respectively.

“I can’t point to one place on the schedule where I feel we can take it easy and still possibly get a victory,” Scott said.

Purdue, runner-up in the 1988 Women’s National Invitational Tournament, also is on the Saluki schedule along with Western Kentucky, rated 7th in nation.

“Our schedule in December is pretty brutal,” Scott said. “If we can get through those games, we may be okay. I can’t say how well we can do because too many variables will come into play.

“SIU will play nine non-conference games, five of which will be on the road. The remainder of the schedule will be comprised of Gateway Conference games.”

“The conference race should be something this season,” Scott said. “More teams have good reason to think they can win than ever before. If we play up to our potential, we should be in the thick of things.”

Scott said that Drake, which is returning all its starters from last season’s (15-13, 12-6) team should be one of the favorites in the Gateway this season.

Scott said regardless of the level of competition this season, her players will perform to the best of their ability.

“I can guarantee you, we’ll play hard for 46 minutes each time out.”

and a 4-6 loss last week to Southwest Louisiana made sure of that. There will be no bowl bids. No more national TV exposure (You do have TV sets down there, don’t you?).

So for practical purposes, our season is over. You get the drift. We might not lose any sleep over the SIU game.

“There’s no excuse if we win. Nonetheless, if I were a disinterested SIU student (and I’ve heard there are a lot of them) looking to make a quick buck, I’d put my pennies on Northern Illinois.

Yes, Northern Illinois will romp over SIU.

Until a couple of weeks ago, our defense was ranked 15th nationally in Division 1-A, and we’ve moved the ball well in all but one game. Quarterback Marshall Taylor has battled injuries all season long, but he has been as effective as ever.

If the defense stalls, the Huskies have Street and Smith’s honorable mention All-America placekicker John Ivancec to finish where the Bone left off.

That plus the fact the Huskies have been “Good to the Bone,” against a majority of their opponents gives me plenty of reason to feel fairly confident about my decision.

45-0 routing by Southwestern Louisiana last week.

“It’s going to be tough,” Pettibone said. “Any time you get beat like that it takes a lot out of you. We have had problems the last two weeks holding people down and scoring both.”

Offensively, the Huskies are paced by senior quarterback Fred Pettibone, who has 42 TD passes for 664 yards and rushing for 332 yards. Pettibone said although the senior is a good pass thrower, there is a natural rivalry there. SIU has an excellent defense, and although Pettibone said he did not take his team to the House of the Devil, he thinks the game is a good one to have.

"I think it is an excellent idea because there is a natural rivalry there. SIU has excellent defense and they are concerned. I think people have begun to recognize defensive talent and can take the game is a good one to have," Pettibone said.

"Any football player can always improve, no one has played a perfect game yet. I do think Marshall has had a good season, but not as much as the past as far as stats concern. We have been working hard to prepare for this game. We want to win, but we also want to have fun on the field," Pettibone said.
