Six Flying Salukis In Air Competition

SIU's Martha Coker To Vie For Title Of Sky Queen

Mayor D. Blaney Miller was expected to be on hand at the SIU Airport early today to greet two parachutists when they drop out of the sky carrying an American flag. The AFROT band was also to be on hand to play "Star Spangled Banner" at the opening of the 1963 National Inland Flying Association Air Meet.

Six members of the Saluki Flying Club will be competing with the 275 other aviators for top honors in the flying competition during the meet. Planes began arriving Thursday. Most of the 75 expected bringing 275 men and women college fliers were in by 3 p.m.

John Fleece, president of the national organization, and president of the flying Salukis, shared the speakers' stand with Mayor Blaney, addressing the contestants before the start of competition at 8 a.m.

Expected to arrive today along with FFA dignitaries and performers were Harris Frank A. Kirk, regional director of the Illinois Board of Economic Development, who will talk to them.

Under the auspices of the Agency for International Development, Department of State, the group will visit California, Missouri, Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico.

Students Will Vote For President, Vice President, 13 Senators May 8

When students go to the polls May 8 to elect student body officers they will select persons to serve in several senatorial positions in addition to choosing a president and vice-president.

Chuck Novak, election commissioner, said senators to represent the following areas will be elected: Off-campus men's supervised housing, off-campus women's supervised housing, off-campus housing, in-town housing, Southern Acres, Thompson Point (senators), University family housing, Men's Small Group Housing, Women's Small Group Housing, Woody Hall, temporary housing, commuters and foreign students.

All the ballot boxes will be located in the Olympic Room of the University Center to avoid confusion, and voting will be conducted all day.

No class officers are to be elected this spring. A recent change approved in the composition of the Student Council provides that class presidents will no longer serve on the Council.

Representatives of various academic units are to be elected in the fall to serve on the Council.

Voting will also be conducted for most popular faculty member and next fall's homecoming chairman.

Petitions of candidacy must be filed at the Student Government Office in the University Center before 5 p.m., May 6.

Audubon Lateef, graduate student from Pakistan, is a candidate for the national presidency of the Association of International Relations Clubs.

Lateef, who has served this school year as president of SIU's International Relations Club, is one of three candidates now being voted on by the 600 member schools of the AIRC. The others are Lyman Henry Goff of Virginia Military Institute and Kent E. Harbaugh of the United States Air Force Academy.

The only--and to his knowledge the first--non-American candidate for the post, Lateef was selected at the organization's 16th annual conference last month at the American International College, Springfield, Mass. Results of the election are to be announced in late May.

Fowler Receives $1,800 Grant

To Study Mexican Population

A $1,800 grant from the American Philosophical Society has been awarded to Melvin L. Fowler, SIU archaeologist, for a pilot study in the central coastal area and upon the eastern highland area of Mexico.

Purpose is to determine the settlement pattern in the coastal region and upon the eastern highland area of Mexico.

Fowler, who is curator of North American archaeology in the SIU Museum, plans to use aerial photographs, on-site mapping and other reconnaissance procedures in addition to test-pit excavations.

He plans to identify and examine archaeological sites in the eastern Puebla highlands and central Vera Cruz lowlands.

"Abundant evidence is accumulating in the Tehuacan region of the southeastern Puebla highlands of the development of plant cultivation as a major subsistence base," Fowler said.

"In the central highlands a detailed knowledge of urban communities has been developed. This study will be focused upon a gap in knowledge as to the differing patterns in the two areas. Fowler plans to make the pilot study during the summer and winter of 1963 and the winter of 1964, with more extensive excavations to follow in 1964-65 and 1965-66."

Authorities said most of the persons charged to the warrants are high school students from the Herrin area. One of the group was reportedly identified and, when arrested, named the others involved. The incident occurred about 12:30 a.m. Saturday.

C.P. Snow Unable To Speak For Science

British Writer Held Perfect Example Of Worker Locking Sense Of ‘Rightness’

Karl has presented an analysis of Snow’s literary activity, which is the point of the literature, but it is unexplained, though probably intended to present Snow as an acceptable spokesman for Science.

Although Snow spent many years in scientific activity, he was not always a perfect example of a worker in this field, being primarily interested in the scientific experience, an experience which in all respects defeats the requirements of religious experience.

The concept which carries within it a sense of ‘rightness’ that brooks no contradiction is not immutable, even with political life, since it is not, I believe, the case with Karl. Karl, the president of the French, is a leading French mathematician, has described it vividly.

It is the experience which makes it possible for an individual to stand without it. While without it the activity is not deemed to be meaningful, and even meaningless, and it is this life of frustration and belittlement that forces the writer to become a writer of fiction.

I believe that a writer’s fiction may be analyzed, and Snow’s fiction shows with exceptional clarity his attitude toward science and the frustr¬ ations which he experienced in it, and which it forced upon him. The protagonist of the Strangers and To Shelia, who is the scientist, but his brother Martin, who is an actor, assumes this role. I believe that the writer’s fiction often does not look upon his life in science as an expression of the activity itself, but rather as a metaphor for a larger, a haphazard and often inappropriate expression of the irrelevance of the introduction of the two lives of Lewis and Martin into the structure of the society in which they live, and that their behavior or exist¬ ence is pertinent. But these two lives do not take the careers to which the two men are married. Lewis obtains neither pleasure nor joy, but only misery and despair from his work with the scientists’ wives. Science, gives all her gifts to others and withholds them from herself. Lewis is the only one of Snow’s “scientists” who has the sympathetic and affection which she lavishes only on the scientists’ wives. Science, gives all her gifts to others and withholds them from herself.

There is another aspect of Snow’s treatment of the scientist which reveals his dis¬satisfaction with people in this category whom he considers different from himself. None of Snow’s scientists are balanced individuals. They are headed for suicide or they are belittled by gross sen¬suality or other asocial behavior. Snow’s work was a picture of successful creative sci¬entists. The scientist is the only one of the scientists capable of standard behavior in an integrated society.

Martin, the scientist, is equally devoted to a wife who is the perfect example of a worker as another scientist, suggesting again that science has no meaning, no real interest, no concern with any present life. Eventually after Sheila’s sui¬ cide, Lewis finds a happy ending and a new life with a Mexican girl; a friend¬ship with a bi-sexual criminal, which leads to an act of theft; and the reader finds himself wishing the title of the promise had been fulfilled. The Debs who could be a railroad fireman, member of the Indiana legisla¬tor and leader of the American Railway Union, leader of the bloody Pullman strike, sympathetic friend of the “ syndicalist rebels” of the IWU, and 1920 presidential candidate running for office from the Pedestrian Club prison at Atlanta, where he was convicted No. 9455, is drawn in less than half dimensions. Students will find few answers to ex¬plain the mysterious nature of the radical mind, the sources of the crusading spirit, the will to destroy the earthly paradise of a larar of Utopianism, or the indescribable nature of a man for all of alleged seditions utterances who could tell the truth. I am not, in the world, while there is a criminal element, I am not free.’

The study has merit, bow¬ever, in its critical path of radicalism in America, and something of the deep spirit of the American Left Wing. The irreconcilable claims and

Not For Those With Victorian Morals

Since the end of World War II, there has been a rapid changing with the rise of the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class.

In Men of the Left, Edward Loomis, the arbitrary use of the word, is the major con¬ cept of the book, though he never completely refutes it. It is the complete refusal to find a place for himself in society. George, brother, has been, according to society, Sam Jackson, the eldest son, de¬ spised by society, is the major concept. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent. He is the only one of the men who is completely independent.

I recommend Men of the Left to those who do not have a Victorian moral code. They are manifestations of this man’s life. His father, a prototype of the con¬servative and respected scholar, is the prototype of the con¬servative and respected scholar.

We live in the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class.

I believe Snow would be best described as a spokes¬

tentive creative activity and the activity of life. To my mind there is only one small specific dif¬ference between the creative activity and the creative activity of science, the creative worker is guided by intuition. The difference is that the revelation which intuition brings to the worker is different from that which the artist can be presented without a precise analysis of the problem. This difference is not in the investigation, but the scientist, after the problem is resolved, must present a step-by-step

Eugene Debs Sparked Rise Of Socialists In America

Contemporary America was spanned in the era in which Eugene Victor Debs was born, (1855-1926). A turbulent, burgeoning age of sharply etched contrasts and confused ideologies. The Pullman strike of 1894 produced the Wealth of Nations. America. The core of the reforms Politics of 'Teddy Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. Debs and Wilson were prototypical of the consciousness of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes and Sam Gompers; Andrew Carnegie’s belief that rich men and power were not only beneficial, that the public was not only beneficial, but that the public was not only beneficial, it was not only beneficial.

If H. Wayne Morgan, in his Eugene V. Debs, Socialist for President, has given us a consider¬able picture of the man, he has at least the main purpose of "to chart a course of the socialists" in our national life in 1925. The book is a worthwhile contribution to fill a small gap in the story of political parties through their eight faithful battles in the rise of American socialism, its role in five presidential campaigns, and its decline. Yet Morgan has cho¬sen for his title a figure of great interest, an administrator who has been more of an exercise in depth research than in the mass of this fascinating age, never than in the mass of this fascinating age,

We live in the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class, the middle-class.

I believe Snow would be best described as a spokes¬

SIU Tennis Team Seeking 14th Straight Victory

Face Oklahoma State, Kansas, Wichita At Kansas City Meet

Hoping to extend its unbeaten string to 14, SIU's tennis team is entered in the Missouri Quadrangular at Kansas City this weekend against Oklahoma State, Kansas and Wichita.

The Salukis might find some rough going as two of the teams coach Dick LeFevre's unblinking squad will face, beat them last year.

SIU was blanked by the Cowboys, 9-0, last season and the Kansas Jayhawks turned back the Salukis twice last year by identical 6-3 scores, Southern did not meet the Wichita Shockers last year.

However, the Salukis are obviously a much stronger team this year. After 11 matches last campaign, LeFevre's squad posted a dismal 4-7 slate. SIU has already beaten five of the squads they lost to last year with three of the victories being shutouts.

The Cowboys, however, seem to have a stronger team this year than last year.
