Couple approved by City Council, 4-1

“The City of Carbondale votes no,” Counselor Keith Tuxhorn said as he voted against the east-west couple, but then leaned forward and said, “I voted yes for the front of a packed city council chambers Tuesday night.”

Punctuated by applause from the audience at several points, a visibly frustrated Tuxhorn gave his reasons for voting against the couple and asked that other council members give their reasons for voting in favor.

“If you can’t answer questions, why the hell are you voting here?” Tuxhorn asked after Mayor Neil Dillard said he was not obligated to give the reasons for his vote.

“He (Tuxhorn) is interrogating the council, and that is not his appropriate role,” Dillard said.

Co-counsel John Yow, the only councilman who attended Tuesday’s Tuxhorn specifically, said he was voting for the couple in part because the ‘West Main Street suicide’ has to be eliminated.

Appropriately was referring to the street’s single lane running east.

The couple proposal was submitted in April by the Illinois Department of Transportation and will make Main Street one-way westbound and Walnut Street one-way eastbound.

To complete the couple, a street from the intersection of Brook Lane and Main Street to the intersection of Walnut Street and Oakland Avenue will be made one-way eastbound.

Ironically, Tuxhorn abstained on a house resolution to commit money for the bypass. That motion failed.

“Education is going to pay an extremely important role in this election,” Dillard said at the grand opening of the Michael Dukakis for President headquarters, 719 S. University Ave.

Dukakis, a 25-year-old graduate of Princeton University, is the daughter of the Democratic presidential candidate.

“Something’s happening in the country right now,” Dukakis said. “College students are looking around at the issues and there are so many issues we can feel strongly about.”

Speaking to a crowd dominated by University students, Dukakis said, “We have to stop the anachronisms on Pell Grants and other forms of financial assistance started by the Reagan administration.”

“Every student that graduates from high school deserves the right to get a college education,” she said.

Dukakis also called for an increase in educational standards of the nation. The increase, she said would let teaching once again become a respected position and would allow the United States to be more competitive with the rest of the world.

She thanked those in attendance for their support and energy they have shown for the Dukakis campaign, saying “this is what kept my family going the last eight months.”

Dukakis has been traveling on state to state to help to raise support for her father’s presidential bid.

Freshman and sophomores from nearby dormitories seem to be one of the problems at Lewis Park Apartments, Judy Calufetti, the university’s assistant director of housing reported.

But, Edward Jones, director of University Housing, said the residents from the dormitories are not the cause of the main problem.

Although Jones said he is not present when the incidents happen at Lewis Park, a lot depends on the regulations and what the students expect.

“It is not a matter of students from the dorms being crazy, it is a matter of what is permitted,” Jones said.

“We have a lot of students, in or out of the dorms, to socialize without drinking,” Jones said.

Neil Jacobson, administrative assistant to the chief of police, said that people other than residents of Lewis Park are always present, but could not comment on who was the main culprit or the undergraduate drinking or fighting at Lewis Park.

“The bars uptown are cracking down, so the freshmen and sophomores from the dorms hit the liquor store, and then come over to Lewis Park with their two-pack,” Calufetti said.

“If there isn’t a party, they make their own in our parking lot,” she added.

Duke’s daughter turns to Spanish in Latin American conversation

The briefings Andrea Dukakis gives to her father might be a little more exciting than usual.

During her visit Monday to Carbondale, Dukakis had the opportunity to talk with Roberto Izurieta, graduate student from Ecuador.

Izurieta has been in the United States for seven months, but has become very active in the 1988 campaign.

Izurieta’s interest stems from decaying relations between the United States and Latin America. Relations, he said, are declining because of decaying relations in Nicaragua.

Art festival aimed at children

Dancing, music, and storytellers to highlight event

ARTS IN Celebration '88, a festival designed to give children a first-hand knowledge of art and highlight local artistry, will be held at Turkey Park this weekend.

The festival has been in the planning stages for two years. Bonnie Mareno and Cathy Sunabl, co-chairs of the event, initiated the idea, which resulted in a community meeting to discuss the possibility of having an arts festival in Carbondale.

"Cathy and I wanted to do something for the community," Mareno said.

The children will release 2,000 helium-filled balloons in hopes of reaching other children across the country.

The festival will allow children the opportunity to view and participate with storytellers, drama and dance companies, musicians and other types of visual and performance artists in throughout the park.

THE FESTIVAL'S artistic "signature event" will be the hanging of hundreds of yards of a hand-dyed satin clothesline along Route 13.

Enedor, the Southern Illinois Repertory Dance Co. and Mercy.

There will also be an international culture show, featuring traditional dances from China, Malaysia and Laos.

The finale to Saturday's activities will be a masked ball held at the National Guard Armory, on the corner of S. Washington and S. 11th.

Memories fading for Obelisk II yearbook

The COLLEGE years can be the most exciting times of a student's life, but after graduation, all that is left of those years are memories and, perhaps, a yearbook of photographs.

In recent years, the Obelisk II Yearbook publication at SIU-C has stood on very shaky ground. Financial problems, reductions in staff and management, and cuts have threatened to dissolve the publication altogether.

Already, the Yearbook for the 1987-88 academic year has been declared dead. Students who graduated in the 1987-88 academic year will be omitted from the Obelisk II library. For those students looking forward to having a pictorial memorabilia of their college years, this is unfortunate.

Changes in the Obelisk's accounting methods for fiscal year 1987 put restraints on spending, forcing the number of paid staff members to be reduced from 14 to one. Staff members who previously had been paid for their services were asked to become volunteers. Of course, most of them left.

Because of reductions in staff, the 1986-87 Obelisk Yearbook has been delayed until December, when the Obelisk staff hopes to distribute them. The two-year delay in production will leave those students who have been waiting for their paid-for yearbooks.

The University must decide whether to give more funding to the Obelisk II or abolish it until money is available to produce a more stable yearbook. We suggest the University consider overnight the Yearbook and, if necessary, make the presidential race a referendum for humans.

Without a secure foundation, there is no reason for students to trust that their yearbook will be published. This could mean a lot of trouble for future yearbook publications. Lack of advance orders and student participation will kill another yearbook, and assorted memories for some unfortunate students.

Movie not victim of censors

If an unimformed and ill-read person were to glance at the words of Larry Auchstetter, he might get the impression that the Christian community has somehow "banned" the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ." Actually, what is frightening is how a people so insecure Auchstetter can be so ignorant as to what constitutes censorship.

The activity took place in Carbondale was not censorship at all. Christians decided to protest a movie which fictionalizes the man Jesus. They wrote letters saying that they would not attend the film. The community has somehow "banned" the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ." Actually, what is frightening is how a people so insecure Auchstetter can be so ignorant as to what constitutes censorship.

Censorship occurs when someone is legally punished financially or otherwise, for expressing his views. When the laws punish someone for speaking his mind, when someone is thrown in prison for showing movies or writing articles, then we have censorship. One recalls that many countries today prohibit the importation of Bibles. This blatant form of censorship doesn't seem to bother the Holier-Than-Thou censor crying crocodile tears over袈裟 Communism, who are blackmailing Christianity.

The manager of the Varsity had every right to show the film. He won't be punished at all. He may not hurt the business of the Christian community for a period, but to shout "censorship" resembles the ignorance, and the arrogance, of an illiterate society which has long forgotten how "censorship" occurs.

Abortion stance shouldn't give edge to candidate who hasn't sorted it out

Once there was a time when a man felt a sense of responsibility for his actions.

Today, however, the two men who want to be our leader fail to acknowledge that a man has any role in a pregnancy.

Michael Dukakis, on the other hand, is pro-choice and would allow it to the woman to decide whether or not she would have an abortion, considering the fact that Dukakis has hinted at dealing with hostile outbursts from the pro-choice portion of the campaign's voters.

But Dukakis is the kind of politician that would be forgets or doesn't acknowledge that many pro-choice voters among the family. Bush, probably is farthest from the mark. Publishing the person who performs the abortion and giving the "additional victims" a right to live, I wonder if Bush has learned anything from the current drug policy he so heartily embraces.

On the subject of drugs, Bush wants to focus on users as well as suppliers. When it comes to abortion, Bush wants to cast the pro-life lobby as "murderers, the suppliers are "victims," the women are "victims,") is asking for trouble. I wonder if Bush has learned anything from the current drug policy he so heartily embraces.

These glorious days of yesteryear when father knew best and my threeSCREEN on Everest, the problems of the single-parent household. That kind of family ideal would make more sense than any of the emotional displays that we hear on the abortion issue.

Once there was a time when a man felt a sense of responsibility for his actions. Today, however, the two men who want to be our leader fail to acknowledge that a man has any role in a pregnancy.

Bush may want to make the family strong again, but he has not said what he has in store for the families that are not as fortunate. What will Bush do for the women who chooses not to have an abortion? Would the Bush government help support abortion clinics, thus making it possible for a woman to have an abortion even though the father of the child has disappeared from their lives at the notion of the father? Has he obtained from Bush's abortion stance?

Bush is a kind of pro-life voter, few Bush voters are "liberal," liberal, liberal!"

Remember that the women who have dismantled many social programs and used the savings to help pay for weapons.

Of course Bush doesn't care about abortion, but his stance is the families he believes have a right to life. If he cared, he'd talk tough to the senators who leave children to fend for themselves, with one, second age mother to protect and support them.

The presidential candidates seriously addressed all aspects of the abortion issue, I believe that they were taking it more seriously than they do the audience response to the one-liners and news bites.

Bush is the worse of the two. He justifies the emotions of those who clearly adhere to the ideal that life is sacred. If Bush were as truly aware of the ramifications of abortions as the pro-life voters, he would represent, he would have sorted it out many years ago.

He's right, they are victims. He just doesn't know who victimized them.

Number of drug-related deaths show American drug policy is misdirected

In response to your editorial regarding the ABC thread-and-one-half hour discussion dedicated to the decriminalization of drugs in our country, I feel that the only local or federal government measures that have resulted in the severe use of drugs or cracked an important drug ring. Yet, we must continue to use this drugs, are very easily obtainable in most of the country, so that it is. There has been no moral or economic benefit to society. Dealers and addicts are making huge profits as a result of this abuse, and addicts are committing all sorts of crimes in order to finance and occasionally support their addiction. And what has been our most important response to this continued and undeniable failure? Well, let’s just pump some more money into drug enforcement, and then that will solve everything. Hey, let’s go to the ticket. At this point it seems to us that it is clearly not set.

The majority of the people in the United States are fearful of what changes would be brought about by these laws. No doubt there would be an increase in drug use. It’s unclear just exactly how much of an increase there would be. On the positive side, without a doubt we would lower the crime rate significantly. Drugs would cost much less than they do now and even the most impoverished addicts would not have to resort to crime to support their addiction.

A portion of the incredible sum of money that we spend annually on the interdiction of drugs and the imprisonment of dealers and users could be redirected toward public education aimed at preventing drug addiction. We could also use some of this money for treating those already addicted. The money left over would be that much less that we have to pay in individual insurance policies.

If we regulated these drugs the way we do alcohol and tobacco, we would ensure the quality of the drug and thereby eliminate deaths resulting from accidental overdose as well as deaths from AIDS acquired via dirty needles. We also tax these drugs as we do alcohol and tobacco, which would certainly significantly increase federal revenue (and perhaps lower our huge federal deficit).

Each year about 230,000 Americans die from tobacco products (e.g., emphysema, lung cancer, and heart disease). There are also approximately 5,000 alcohol-related traffic deaths each year. In most cases, these deaths result from accidents, murder, rape, and murder where alcohol was a most prominent factor. Because of approximately 5,000 people die each year from so-called illegal drugs (i.e., heroin, cocaine, and marijuana). Clearly the most important drugs are already legal.

I think it is time to try a more reasonable approach in dealing with drugs. Maybe we can be as successful as those in Holland have been. We’re not then we can try something else. One promising approach is to reintroduce, tulle, and in view of the above, the drug statistics, misdirected. — Scott Parker, graduate student, clinical psychology.

Earth First! purpose is information

This letter is in response to the editorial “Battleground Tsetse” in the September 28 edition of Earth First! as an error in the environmental organization. Earth First! is not an “organization,” but a group of people who are dedicated to environmental views. Second, I personally never concluded that the major measures taken by others of Earth First are not those taken by them financially and spiritually. I do not and will not support any damaging illegal actions. The main purpose of Earth First is to inform the public of the world is taking place on our land. Thirdly, I usually happen through public demonstrations, acts of non-violent civil disobedience, and “media stunts.” People have to be aware of what is going on in their own backyards. The ecological solutions to problems are those that are seen as facts which feel that true spirits for the land favor to preserve a forest. All speck should be openly published as well as openly debated in Cave Valley. The hall is now in the court of these people. It can either put its workers in jeopardy by cutting the speaking time. It is possible that an injury may result, or it could be a death. All injuries which have resulted from speaking were the results of the companies’ “they’ll-shape-you-and-treat-you-be­-­fore-you-get-into-them.” The purpose of a speaking is not to injure the person, the company has the choice, people or profits.

Having dealt with the Shawnee National Forest, I must say that the Shawnee National Forest has a fairly sound management scheme overall and are not I think they are. As a result, the Forest Service districts out west there minimizers are busy kissing the logging industry’s (esp. Rosebud, etc.) backside. Go to St. Helens and try to tell the difference between the whole destructive activity of some nearby clear cut. You can’t. Forest Service decision have usually been in favor of the logging industry. Crystal hogwash to see their forest cut behind the backs of environmental groups as they tried to save them legally. The “death penalty before the trial” argument has been ineffective. The evidence is there. There a great deal held by the Forest Service for well below cost, and logging roads are being built, used, and paid for at the expense of the taxpayers. As consumers we have to pay high prices for timber that comes off our land. We lost coming and going.

Let the tax dollars go toward building and maintaining highways that everyone can use and enjoy. If the Forest Service promoted tourism instead of logging, the economy of Southern Illinois would improve. People in Chicago are looking for places to go nearby. They don’t know what a gem they have down here because no one told them, and if they do come down they must contend with poor roads and few directional signs. Just let a Chicagoan try to find the Little Grand Canyon without careful, detailed information. If not logging the Shawnee would cause economic collapse, then maybe it should proceed. That is only if the limit is sold at a market price and all development costs are absorbed by the company, that pushes costs too high and loggers are put out of business.

Should hospitals be allowed to dump dangerous wastes into the ocean because it’s too expensive to dispose of them properly and doing so might cause some doctors and nurses to lose their jobs? Ask a million Easterners that couldn’t swim in the ocean last summer.

Yes, I use wood products, timber needs and the need of much of the country can be met by the cutting of plans and timber with no damage done, and the environment. I use wood products, timber needs and the need of much of the country can be met by the cutting of plans and timber with no damage done, and the environment.

We have the technology to produce a bastardized version of harmony with our environment, but it will cost a bit. Until the Almighty dollar takes a back seat to the evil dollar, things such as the Sierra Club, Audubon Society, Nature Conservancy, and Earth First! will be there seeing it that “the right thing” at least gets a fair chance. — Edward Land, graduate student, geology.

Southmark-Johnstown Management Co. spends hundreds of dollars every weekend on security, maintenance, and cleaning up the area after parties on the property occur, Calufetti said.

People have been renting somewhere else, she said, and coming here to Lewis Park and trashing it.

Calufetti has been in the managers position for about two years, and is trying to get rid of the reputation Lewis Park has for being the party place at SIU-C.

"I want to work with the University and the Undergraduate Student Government to help them find something for the students to do besides come to Lewis Park," Calufetti said.

The prevailing reputation of Lewis Park as being "the place to go" for a party is over, Calufetti said.

"The days of the huge courtyard parties are gone," she added.

Another apartment complex, Garden Park Acres Apartments, managed by Wiegand Construction and the midwest has the problems Lewis Park does not have.

"Partying is not a big problem here, and in most instances we are not even asked for permission to have the party," said the manager.

"Ninety-five percent of the residents here are interested in their education, they are not here to party," Ellis said.

"We don't want people milling around our apartments like it is a state fair," said Judy Calufetti.

The SIU-C Police, Carbondale Police, and the Jackson County Sheriff's Department were all called to Lewis Park, where a car was parked in the front of the entrance with a keg of beer, said Calufetti.

An arrest was called because of a reported injury, and the 500 people gathered at the scene watching the vehicle through, Calufetti said.

The instigators of the riot did not appear to be residents of Lewis Park.

Fablo Reyes, who was charged with assault, resisting arrest and unlawful assembly that Friday night, was listed as a resident of 6B Lewis Park.

However, Calufetti said that Reyes is not under lease with Lewis Park, but said he stays there some weekends with his friends.

Most of the problems Lewis Park has are basically not from the residents, Calufetti said, however, they are who pays for the damage done.

The money spent on repairing damage done over the weekends could be going for more positive things, she said.

"We've worked really hard to upgrade the apartments for those who live here, and after we get rid of this problem then our residents can start having their parties again," Calufetti said.

"We don't want people milling around our apartments like it is a state fair," she added.

Calufetti has warned residents of the new rules regarding parties at Lewis Park.

Parties must be small and kept in the apartment, and wandering around the property who is not an invited guest of residents are asked to leave by duty police officers hired for security.

"We've had a real bad reputation in the past, and we are trying to turn it around," Calufetti said.

A near riot at Lewis Park on Sept. 18, though, is what sparked Calufetti's anger.

Welfare overhaul approved

Mandatory work program included for recipients

WASHINGTON (UPI) - House-Senate conferees approved a compromise plan Tuesday to overhaul the nation's welfare system, agreeing to a mandatory work provision critics call "slave labor."

Breaking a three-month impasse over the scope and cost of the bill, conferees accepted a series of compromise measures negotiated late Monday, including a federal work program for welfare recipients.

In a 2-1 vote, the House and Senate conferees agreed to the compromise measure, but the first welfare overhaul bill to 53 years won unanimous approval from the nine Senate conferees.

"A chance like this doesn't come along very often," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "This legislation is far from perfect. I am confident, however, that the families who are trapped in the cycle of poverty would tell us to give them a chance and pass the bill."

Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., the chief architect of the legislation, said the House and Senate could vote on the welfare reform bill as early as Friday.

President Reagan had threatened to veto the massive legislation, saying: "I am confident, however, that this compromise welfare package is a case of false labeling," Hawkins said.

Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., the chief architect of the legislation, said the House and Senate could vote on the welfare reform bill as early as Friday.

President Reagan had threatened to veto the massive legislation, saying: "I am confident, however, that this compromise welfare package is a case of false labeling," Hawkins said.

The chance like this doesn't come along very often," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "This legislation is far from perfect. I am confident, however, that the families who are trapped in the cycle of poverty would tell us to give them a chance and pass the bill."

Retired New England couple supports anti-Dukakis vote

By Robert L. Knollig
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Editor's note: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently sent its reporters on a cross-country tour to gather interviews with ordinary voters who will help choose the presidential candidate. This is a story from one such series.

MOUNT WASHINGTON, N.H. — On the best days atop the mountain, Virginia Martin looks over a sunlit sea of birch-tree valleys and the island peaks of the Presidential Range. On the worst, she can't see her own feet in the fog.

"Ginny" Martin, 57, works every other week as a museum caretaker atop Mount Washington, the highest peak in New England. She spends the odd weeks helping to run an old cog railroad and fixing up Sleigh Bell Farm, her home in the valley at Whitefield, N.H.

From the birch-tree valleys to the mountaintops, Ginny Martin's husband, Warren, 64, knows the landscape and the people of New Hampshire's north country.

WITH THEIR perspective from the heights of Mount Washington, the Martins delight in describing burdensome "Massachusetts republic" state government when he isn't working about fiscal problems: A few years ago, the nest egg they had invested firm run into financial problems.

When they survey the presidential race, the Martins feel a bit like they do when a dense gray fog moves in. They have trouble discerning a clear direction to the campaign. And they think both candidates — like streams taking the path of least resistance down the mountainside — have avoided confronting some bedrock issues.

For one thing, the Martins hear talk about the federal budget deficit, but have seen few good proposals from either candidate to solve the problem. The Martins have a personal reason for worrying about fiscal problems: A few years ago, the nest egg they had saved for early retirement was virtually lost when their investment firm ran into financial problems.

THAT'S WHY the Martins sometimes work seven-day weeks even though they're talking about his days in the U.S. Army's 10th Mountain Division during World War II. Both Martins backed Republican leader Bob Dole in this year's New Hampshire primary — Dole also served in the 10th Mountain and was badly wounded in the war.

They are disappointed that he did not win the Republican presidential nomination. That collapse makes Martin view the nominee, Vice President George Bush, the Martins hardly want to name.

At the White Mountains' Presidential Range atop Mount Washington, they both expect to vote for him.

"IT'S REALLY a vote against Dukakis," Ginny Martin says. "When they survey the presidential race, the Martins feel a bit like they do when a dense gray fog moves in. They have trouble discerning a clear direction to the campaign. Reggae night set to benefit Jamaican hurricane victims

By Diane Mivilli

Students will have a chance tonight to help Jamaican communities damaged by Hurricane Gilbert. A collection will be taken tonight at Pinch Penny Pub, 706 E. Grand, during reggae night. Donations of dried food products as well as monetary contributions would be appreciated, Alex Paul, a Carbondale resident who will be collecting the donations, said. Paul, who has traveled yearly to Jamaica since 1989, said he will personally deliver the donations. They will be used in the villages of Catacupa and Mount Salem located near Montego Bay, he said.

Paul said he will provide addresses and envelopes for people wishing to directly mail their contributions.

"People in these villages struggle in their everyday lives and after this Hurricane Gilbert they're really struggling," Paul said.

Ann Raynius, a partner at Pinch Penny Pub said, "We are doing this promotion because for the past two years we've had reggae night weekly and it has been successful. Jamaica has helped us. Now we would like to help Jamaica."

"Anything will help. If we make $20 out of this, it will help," Paul said.

Karayiannis said the promotion will run all day from 9 p.m. to close and WIDB will provide music from 9 p.m. to 12:30. A percentage of the day's gross profit will be donated to the cause, she said.

Kelley, Poshard to debate

By Scott Perry

Staff Writer

The second of three debates between Congressional candidates Patrick Kelley and Glenn Poshard will be held tonight at Rend Lake College.

The debate begins at 7:30 p.m. Both candidates are coming off what they consider to be a good debate, representatives of both candidates said.

"We were happy," Jim Wilson, campaign chairman for Poshard for Congress, said.

"The idea for the group came from predominantly black students feel they are an important component of the University, many of whom feel they are an important component of the University, make them aware of their potential, inform them of support groups within the University, make them aware of student work, scholarships and financial aid possibilities, child care facilities, wellness programs, and housing opportunities, and help them keep their confidence up," Parkers said.

Carol Felder, chief academic advisor for the College of Human Resources, said that the group will be "help students feel they are an important component of the University."

"There is a strong interest and need for the program," she said.

The group holds study sessions every Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday to help minority students. It's a good awareness program," she said.

The program comes from students for students, and will help minority students maintain their academic potential, inform them of support groups within the University, make them aware of student work, scholarship and financial aid possibilities, child care facilities, wellness programs, and housing opportunities, and help them keep their confidence up, Parker said.

"The program was needed to help minority students that come from predominantly black schools," Parkers said. "We don't want these students to lose interest in the University because these students usually have insecurities.

The idea for the group came from their own experiences, Parker said. "We want to help incoming freshmen and transfer students. It's a good

Group to help minority students

By Nora Bentley

Staff Writer

Students in the College of Human Resources have started a group to help minority students adjust to the University.

The group, called the Project Retention Organization or PRO, was initiated by Traci Ell Parker, a junior in social work. The organization is composed of social work and administration of justice majors.

Parker said that she and other students felt the program was needed to help minority students that come from predominantly black schools to want to stay in the University.

Playoffs are rescheduled

NEW YORK (UPI) — Starting times for the two League Championship Series games scheduled Oct. 5 have been changed to accommodate the national telecast of the vice presidential debate, Major League Baseball and ABC announced Tuesday. Game 1 of the American League Championship Series will start at 12:20 p.m. CDT instead of the originally scheduled 7:28 p.m. Game 2 of the National League Championship Series has been moved to 8:20 p.m. CDT to 8:08 p.m.

The vice presidential debate, originally scheduled for 8-9:30 p.m. CDT, will be conducted from 7-8:49 p.m.

"Although these changes will create a significant inconvenience to the clubs, league and baseball fans everywhere," Commissioner Peter Ueberroth said, "baseball recognizes its responsibility in this election year to allow the Democratic and Republican parties access to a national forum in prime time."

U.S. women's basketball still in men's shadow

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — On the verge of a gold medal, the U.S. women's basketball players still get overshadowed by the men in the Olympics.

They don't attract large crowds, don't get as much press, and have been subjected to one question regarding the U.S. men's team for every one about themselves. Remarkably, they don't let it bother them, aside from an occasional few words of wishing talk.

'We don't play as high, but who says we don't play as hard,' said Teresa Weatherspoon, every bit as daring and daring as her point guard counterpart on the U.S. men's team.

That hard play can garner the highest award tonight, when the Americans take on Yugoslavia in the women's gold-medal game.

The U.S. women are solid favorites for several reasons, among them an earlier 101-74 victory over the Yugoslavs in the preliminary round. It's reasonable to expect Yugoslavia to put up a better fight, but the meaning of the game provides sufficient incentive to counteract a U.S. letdown.

'It's a great feeling to be there but the job is not done,' said U.S. Coach Kay Yow.

This is a great happening for women's basketball in the United States. The challenge is there, the opportunity is there. But nobody is going to hand it to us on a silver platter.'

Silver is not the metal on the minds of the Americans.

revised and adapted," Hunter said. 'We have to be willing to recognize achievement.'

Sinclair talked 22 assists for the Salukis before going to 11 for the Billikens' Shelly Metzler.

Hunter said one area the Salukis need to improve is serving.

Baker-Howe said her team needs to focus in on winning instead of just going through the motions.

'They just go out and play,' she said. 'We need to learn how to apply pressure.'

The Billikens arrived at Davenport early for the match, something they don't usually do, Baker-Howe said.

'I think it took us out of context a little,' she said. 'Usually we come in like a flash and leave. This time we came in and stopped.'

the U.S. armed forces. She began teaching tennis lessons during her 16-month stay.

Auld was named temporary women's tennis coach at SIU-C in 1982. But the assignment was soon permanent and a career was cemented.

Auld said one of the highlights in her 16-year coaching career was sending Sue Briggs to a first-place finish at the regional championships in 1976 in Ohio State.

'Sue was probably one of the best players I've had here,' Auld said. 'She was just too tough mentally, she couldn't make enough points down and still pull through with a win.'

Auld, whose current record stands at 201 wins and 164 losses, has coached Gateway Conference champs in singles and doubles.

Auld, named 1987 Gateway Conf. 'The Year, said the case of the U.S. Armed Forces is a comfortable one here, at the same time you always want to see what you're capable of achieving. 'Athletics is a big part of my life. It's a way of developing confidence and self-esteem, and it gives you an aggressive attitude you need out in the world.'

Auld said she has always derived satisfaction from participating in athletics.

'So, in some way or another, I'll probably be involved in athletics for the rest of my life.'

For St. Louis University coach Janet Baier-Howe, Tuesday night’s match was more than a road trip to SIU-C. It was a trip back home.

Baier- Howe is a former Saluki volleyball standout and a member of the U.S. Olympic team from 1975 to 1982.

“If nice to be back,” said the former music major. “I went over to Albild Hall and haunted the halls a bit.”

A member of former Coach Joanne Thorpe’s team in the mid-1970s, Baier-Howe said Davies Gym has had quite a face-lift.

“If don’t have all this fancy gray, and the paint was falling off,” she said gesturing to the ceiling. “Tsgirls always got the old gym and the guys got the nice, pretty one.”

Auld gains 200th win as women’s tennis coach

Judy Auld’s passion for tennis began as a 13-year-old who made the five-mile bicycle trek across Decatur to the city tennis courts.

It was a modest start for the future Judy Auld, who as coach of the women’s tennis team recently got her 200th career victory.

“When I first started playing,” Auld said, “I took free public lessons from two instructors on two courts — with about 50 other kids. I never played with dolls. My mother bought me one doll and I never played with it.

I had lacked formal training during high school because she grew up in a time when sports were taboo for girls. Decatur had no organized sports teams, Auld said.

Auld attended Lake Land College in Mattoon where she practiced with the men’s tennis team because the women’s team didn’t have a coach.

“I always beat them, but I kept me in shape,” she said.

Auld then transferred to SIU-C, where she played tennis, softball, basketball and field hockey. In basketball, she was the guard for the 1975 team that finished fifth in the National Collegiates. In softball she was part of the 1971 College World Series squad that took fourth.

In tennis, Auld won an Illinois Sectionals title and was twice invited to the national tournament.

“IT was a different time,” Auld said. “The only people who encouraged me in athletics before I came to Southern were my parents, my tennis coach and my softball coaches in Decatur.

“I had my life to do over, I’d be right where those kids are now. Everything is so much more now, and that makes the competition even stronger.

After graduating with a physical education degree, Auld joined her husband Gary (from whom she was divorced in 1982) in West Germany where he was stationed with the 187th Field Artillery.活下去...
